Senators See Swift Action On Snarled Labor Bill

Hearings on House Measure Forecast Early Next Week; Byrd Asks Speed

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The stringent House defense labor bill yesterday ran into a parliamentary snarl in the Senate, but leaders privately predicted committee hearings and action by the Senate before the end of next week.

Senator Thomas (Democrat), of Utah, called a meeting of his Senate Labor Committee for Monday morning to agree on procedure as demands mounted for expeditious consideration.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, in a letter to Thomas, said the Senate owed to the House "the obligation of giving immediate consideration to vital legislation adopted for the promotion of our national defense." He asked for a prompt committee report to the Senate.

Piecemeal Action Hit

Senate Minority Leader McNary earlier suggested postponement of slated Monday Senate consideration of the Ball and Connally defense labor bills to give the Labor Committee an opportunity to hold Smith bill hearings. He said the Senate should "legislate once in this field, and not piecemeal."

Senator Connally (Democrat), of Texas, whose bill to take over strike-bound plants is now on the Senate calendar, still wished to proceed with his measure in the Senate Monday, but may yield to requests that he wait for Labor Committee action.

Also on the Senate calendar was the Ball mediation bill, reported by the Labor Committee before the House passed the Smith bill. This measure may be tightened and incorporated into the Labor Committee's redraft of the Smith bill after hearings.

To clarify the parliamentary tangle and plethora of bills, all hands were expected to agree to wait a few days to give the labor group an opportunity to act before attempting to force legislation in the Senate.

There was a clear implication that some "quick action" exponent, possibly Senator Byrd or Senator Herring (Democrat), of Iowa, may move to discharge the Labor Committee and bring the bill before the Senate if a report is not made by Wednesday or Thursday.

Senator Herring, who has a bill before the Labor Committee carrying cooling off, strike ballot and picketing provisions similar to some of the Smith bill restrictions, said if the committee fails to take action

Man Almost Doomed by Error In Jury Verdict

Idabel, Okla., Dec. 5 (INS).—William Pat Herron, 37, congratulated himself tonight that there was a slight error in the jury's verdict which would have sent him to the electric chair for the killing of Tom Crutchfield, of Wright City, following a poker game argument.

When Buel Grinage, court clerk, read the verdict handed him it provided for death by electrocution for murder.

Instantly the 12 jurors arose as one man to shout, in effect:

"That's wrong—that's not our verdict! There's some mistake."

They retired to the jury room again briefly and returned with a verdict of 25 years imprisonment for manslaughter. The foreman explained sheepishly he'd signed the wrong verdict.

Fish Testifies At Nazi Probe; May Return

Congressman Appears Before Grand Jury After Two Months

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

Representative Hamilton Fish yesterday made his long delayed appearance before the special grand jury on German agents.

Fish had "nothing at all" to say when he came out of the grand jury room after an hour and 20 minutes of questioning.

Fish would not say whether the grand jury had asked him to return for further examination, but Special Prosecutors William Power Maloney and Edward J. Hickey, jr., declared that they could not say that his questioning was completed.

Awaited for Two Months

The Congressman's testimony had been awaited for more than two months, since The Post revealed that his secretary, George Hill, 43, sent a truck which hauled evidence away from the headquarters of another witness, who was alleged to be in the pay of George Sylvester Viereck, ace German propagandist.

In the meantime, Hill had been before the grand jury and was indicted on two perjury charges. Viereck was indicted, charged with using Congressional franked envelopes to carry German propaganda. And questions had been asked about the financing of the anti-interventionist committee Fish started before his trip to Europe in 1939.

Summoned nearly a month ago, Fish claimed the "privilege of the House," and won delay, but the House declined to protect him from giving evidence and authorized him to appear.

Roosevelt Encourages Boy Facing Operation

Beverly Hills, Calif., Dec. 5 (AP).—Shim Malone, 10, only son of Attorney and Mrs. Dudley Field Malone, ill more than two years with a leg infection and now facing a major operation, received a telegram from Washington today which said:

"I just want you to know that I am thinking of you and wishing you the best of luck. Keep your chin up. Faith and courage will do the rest."

The message was signed "Franklin Delano Roosevelt."

Slow and Easy

The new 8-mile-an-hour speed limit on a wooden bridge crossing Little River in nearby Arlington County—a vital link in the daily route of thousands of motorists—will prevail for "at least a year," and no effort will be made to strengthen the span.

This was made clear last night by Francis Gillen, assistant superintendent of National Capital Parks, who clamped the sudden speed restriction on the bridge Thursday.

Although Gillen described his action as a "precautionary" measure, the result has tested the tempers of peak-time autoists, whose progress to and from work has reportedly been delayed anywhere from a half-hour to 45 minutes.

While in some quarters it was felt that a competent crew of workmen could—with a supply of strong beams—bolster the bridge and make it safe for normal speeds, Gillen said nothing like this was in prospect at this time.

New Bridge Is Planned

He explained that ultimately—sometime within a year, perhaps—it was planned to replace the wooden structure with a new, masonry overpass.

Admittedly, Gillen had in mind the gigantic Public Roads Administration's project contemplating some 15 miles of new highways, bridges and overpasses servicing the new War and Navy Departments across the river.

The entire scheme is not scheduled for completion until November, 1942.

In the interim, however, Gillen emphasized that Parks authorities would take no action—other than to enforce the 8-mile bridge limit with a special detail of Park police.

Frank Hanrahan, Arlington County manager, said he had received many

Wet Roads Take Their Toll

Virginia Minister Killed, Wife Hurt as Car Skids Into Crash

An Episcopal clergyman was killed and his wife injured, perhaps critically, in an automobile crash yesterday on Highway 1, 5 miles south of Alexandria, Va.

Wet streets in Washington resulted in a number of other traffic accidents. At least ten persons were injured.

The Rev. Sanford L. Rotter, 67, of Mathews, Va., died when he attempted to avoid hitting another automobile and lost control of his vehicle. The minister's car spun in the road and collided with a third automobile which, police said, was driven by Sidney Steen, 40, of Brookline, Mass.

Mrs. Rotter, 65, was taken to Alexandria Hospital by Hall's ambulance, Occoquan, Va., with severe cuts about the body and possible internal injuries. Steen and his wife were bruised but not seriously hurt.

Dr. T. B. McCord, Fairfax County coroner, issued a certificate of accidental death.

The Rev. Mr. Rotter, a native of Petersburg, Va., was rector of Kingston Parish, which is composed of Trinity, St. John's and Christ Churches.

He was graduated from Columbia University, New York City, in 1893, and worked on newspapers in Raleigh, N. C., before entering the ministry. He was once city editor of the Raleigh News and Observer and later editor in chief of the Raleigh Times.

While a student at Virginia Theological Seminary, Alexandria, he taught at Episcopal High School there. He was graduated in 1918,

More Lend-Aid

By John G. Norris

An $8,244,041,531 supplemental defense appropriations bill, opposed by isolationists as "preparation for an A. E. F.," was approved by the House late yesterday by a whopping 309-to-5 vote.

The huge measure, which carries funds to double arms production and expand the Army to two million men, will raise the total voted for defense since the fall of France to more than 67 billions.

This includes lend-lease appropriations, of which the total will be raised to 15 billions by the present bill. It now goes to the Senate, containing an outright lend-lease appropriation of $1,536,491,650, and authority for the President to allocate a half billion more from arms funds voted since last March.

Recommittal Beaten

Opponents of the measure polled their heaviest vote on a motion to return the measure to committee, a parliamentary step equivalent to rejection. The roll-call vote was 232 to 56 against it.

The five who voted against the bill on final passage were Representatives Crawford, Michigan; Lambertson, Kansas; Sumner, Illinois; Rich, Pennsylvania, all Republicans, and Shanley (Democrat), Connecticut.

Earlier two isolationist attempts to cut the bill were rebuffed. The first was a motion by Representative Johns (Republican), of Wisconsin, to eliminate the authority for the President to transfer a half billion more in arms to nations fighting the Axis. It was beaten, 59 to 19.

The second, an amendment by Representative Rich (Republican), of Pennsylvania, to eliminate the lend-lease appropriation of $1,536,491,650, lost on a voice vote.

The more than five hours of debate centered around charges of opponents that the heavy outlay for arms and equipment—about $4,400,000,000—went beyond needs of American defense and was "preparation for an A. E. F."

Two Members Switch

Chairman Cannon of the House Appropriations Committee answered such charges, declaring that the "best way in the world to avoid an A. E. F." is provide the money in the bill for lend-lease and the Army and Navy.

Planes Pound Retreat

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 5.—The Soviet air force is pounding retreating German forces massed for a further retreat across the Mius River, in southern Russia under the eyes of Red army advance troops which have rolled the Nazis back on a 70-mile front and swept the invader from 4000 square miles of Soviet territory, the Moscow radio announced tonight.

An endless stream of high explosives was declared raining down on 1500 German army trucks concentrated around pontoon bridges for a crossing of the Mius, which flows into the Gulf of Azov west of Taganrog.

It was reported previously the Germans probably would attempt to make a stand there.

Aim to Encircle Nazis

This left and lower Soviet arm, the Russians reported by radio, had by-passed Taganrog to the north, lesser bodies remaining to round up the surviving Germans there. Still another Red force was heading for Mariupol, 80 miles on west of Taganrog, in a direct line aimed at encircling the German advance guard. This slanting thrust claimed the capture of a town 20 miles above Taganrog.

In the lengthening stretches of recaptured Soviet terrain the Russians claimed that villages now back in their hands aggregated 200.

Field Marshal Ewald von Kleist's northern anchor thus appeared to be crumbling, his grasp slipping upon the steel city of Stalino itself and his coastal columns still unable to withstand the rising shock of Timoshenko's main forces.

Britain Declares War on Finns, Hungarians and Rumanians

London (Saturday), Dec. 6 (AP).—Britain announced today she was declaring war against Finland, Hungary and Rumania in an action without immediate practical effect but aimed at seating those three Axis satellites definitely on the Nazi side of the peace table after the war.

The announcement by the foreign office followed expiration of a Friday-midnight deadline which Britain set for those three countries to accede to a British demand that they cease fighting Russia.

Technically, the British announcement meant that a state of war would not exist until the three governments were notified formally.

These notifications will specify the exact time when Britain deems herself at war with them, but the time is not expected to be made public until the three governments are informed.

The British conceded that actual declarations of war would not materially change the relations between Britain and Finland, Rumania and Hungary, since diplomatic relations had been broken off long ago and Finnish shipping subjected to seizure.

One source explained:

"The primary difference will come at the peace conference, when these countries will be sitting on the other side of the table."

Formal notices will be directed by Britain through the United States diplomatic channels which handled the earlier notes.

The text of the announcement:

"It is officially stated in London that, no satisfactory replies having been received from the Finnish, Hungarian and Rumanian governments to notes addressed to them last week, communications are being sent to these three governments which will result in existence of a state of war."

The midnight deadline passed without any official British indication that replies of any sort had

Homeward Bound

29th Covered With Glory At Tactics

By Marshall Andrews
Post Staff Writer

Morven, N. C., Dec. 5.—When the Twenty-ninth Infantry Division turns homeward Sunday morning, it will take with it a record of accomplishment which, in a real war, would have covered it with glory.

In the two months of mimic war just ended, the Twenty-ninth, commanded by a major general regarded by regulation as too old to continue in command, completed every march on time and performed every battlefield mission assigned to it. To do this, it sometimes almost transcended the possible.

It was the only one of three former National Guard divisions in Second Army Corps to come to the Carolinas with four National Guard generals and go home with all four still in command.

During two months of moving by motor through civilian traffic, under blackout, in cloying dust and driving rain, it had not a single fatal or serious accident with one of its own vehicles. One man was killed by a truck from an organization not connected with the division. It had no other accidental death from any cause.

Not one officer or soldier was charged with any serious offense against civil or military law.

Strength Doubled

Last April the enlisted strength of the Twenty-ninth was doubled by the addition of selectees who came to it direct from civil life, without the 13 weeks' training in a replacement center received by those who joined most other divisions. At a critical point in its own training, it had to halt and give these new men their basic instruction.

With this personnel, the Twenty-ninth left Fort George G. Meade,

British Repulse Axis Blows Near Tobruk

Widespread Raids By R. A. F. Presage New Libyan Push

By the Associated Press

Cairo, Dec. 5.—The British high command reported tonight the heavy repulse of three Axis attacks on the British spearhead at Ed Duda, southeast of Tobruk, the destruction of 20 more tanks, and widespread R. A. F. raids presaging another big Libyan push by the Imperial Army.

The Tobruk garrison holding Ed Duda, 10 miles outside its coastal defenses, awaited a renewed British drive from the south against intervening German and Italian troops.

Two heavy assaults on Ed Duda were "completely repulsed with severe casualties," and a third Axis attempt to widen the gap between the British gained "a little ground," most of which was rewon in a British counterattack, the communique said.

British Indians were reported to have smashed 18 Italian tanks in the El Gobi area, an important British communications link, while

Orders: 'Until Relieved'

Forgotten by Convoy, Soldier Sticks to Post for 42 Hours

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Dec. 5.—Private Victor Golas, 24, stepped down from an Army truck at a railroad crossing at 1:30 p. m. yesterday and was told to direct Army convoy traffic "until you are picked up."

All yesterday afternoon and all night, while the rain sliced down, Private Golas watched the railroad crossing while trucks filled with soldiers returning from the Carolinas maneuvers area rumbled by.

And Private Golas, wet weary, hungry and sleepy, was still there tonight, obeying his orders to stay on the job "until relieved," but just a bit apprehensive that the Army had forgotten all about him.

Later this evening Golas reported to Military police, and left the case in their hands while he got his first sleep in 42 hours.

Military police said he might be put on a convoy tomorrow or sent to rejoin his unit by train or bus.

The solitary soldier drew a crowd of curious children and by late yesterday they were good friends. Some of them were solicitous enough to bring him coffee and sandwiches from their homes.

But that didn't sustain Private Golas long, so later in the night he built himself a fire, broke out his emergency rations and had a tin of beef and some vegetable stew.

After Day With Dentist

Stimson Forced to Hitch-Hike From Richmond to D. C. Home

Secretary Stimson disclosed yesterday that he had to "hitch-hike" home from Richmond Thursday night after a hectic day with his dentist.

The War Secretary told reporters he flew to New York Thursday morning to have some teeth treated. He found he could take the time off, he said, after a survey of the world found the "Russians doing well at Rostov, Libya in a rather stable condition and the discussion with Japan still going on."

On his return to Washington after a three-hour session in the dentist's chair, he found the air over the city crowded with planes trying to land on the nearly fog-bound airports. His Army pilot advised going to Richmond, the nearest open spot, and they landed about dusk, Stimson said.

But radio messages for an Army car to meet him evidently went astray and there were no taxis at the "rather primitive" Richmond airport, 10 miles from the city, he said. His plight was relieved when a Civil Aeronautics Authority clerk, Theodore G. Lindquist, offered to drive him in.

In Richmond, the Secretary said, he cruised around trying to rent a car and driver to bring him to Washington. Finally he went to a hotel and tried again without luck. Then George E. Williams, manager of the Hotel Richmond, offered to take him home.

Smiling in recollection of his adventure, the 74-year-old Secretary said he found a "committee of gloom" awaiting him at home when he arrived safe and sound at nearly 10. They were worried over his non-appearance.

U. S. Cabinet Meets

By Hedley Donovan

Japan's assertion that her military concentrations in French Indo-China are "precautionary measures" dictated by Chinese troop movements last night received a cool reception in Washington.

The formal Japanese reply to President Roosevelt's pointed request for an explanation of the heavy troop movements into Indo-China, regarded here as a menace to strategic Thailand and Burma, was handed to Secretary of State Hull yesterday by Ambassador Nomura and Saburo Kurusu, Tokyo's special "peace envoy."

They brought no reply to the document Secretary Hull gave them ten days ago, reaffirming this Government's fundamental policies in the Far East, but said they might be ready to present a statement of the Japanese position early next week.

The Japanese statement in full, was:

"Reference is made to your inquiry about the intention of the Japanese government with regard to the reported movements of Japanese troops in French Indo-China. Under instructions from Tokyo, I wish to inform you as follows:

"As Chinese troops have recently shown frequent signs of movements along the northern frontier of French Indo-China bordering on China, Japanese troops, with the object of mainly taking precautionary measures, have been reinforced to a certain extent in the northern part of French Indo-China. As a natural sequence of this step, certain movements have been made among the troops stationed in the southern part of the said territory. It seems that an exaggerated report has been made of these movements. It should be added that no measure has been taken on the part of the Japanese government that may transgress the stipulations of the protocol

Giant Plane Mars Badly Damaged In Water Test

Baltimore, Dec. 5 (AP).—Fire and the flying fragments of a broken propeller seriously damaged the United States Navy's 70-ton aerial battleship, Mars, at the very outset of its scheduled water tests on Middle River today.

Tonight the big ship was aground in the shallow water, plans for its test flight left indefinite by the necessity of repairs.

One of the plane's four 2000-horsepower engines fell into the water, a propeller blade sheared through the skin of the cabin, injuring 1 of 16 occupants, and fire broke out in the engine nacelle when oil and fuel lines were torn loose.

Stimson Calls A.E.F. tory 'Disloyal'

Interpretation Given To So-Called 'Plans' Was False, He Says

Secretary Stimson yesterday accused those responsible for the publication of a secret Army-Navy study as being "wanting in loyalty and patriotism."

He told a press conference that the documents, published by the Chicago Tribune and which envisaged an American expeditionary force of five million men, were "unfinished studies of our production requirements for national defense which have been carried on by the general staff as a part of their duties in this emergency."

"They have never constituted an authorized program of the Government," the War Secretary added.

Meanwhile, Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, isolationist leader, called for an investigation of reported plans for an A. E. F. He told the Associated Press in Casper, Wyo., that he would introduce a resolution calling for a Senate inquiry of the matter, in which Secretaries Stimson and Knox, Gen. Marshall, Admiral Stark and Harry Hopkins would be called.

Wheeler predicted the United States would send a token army to Great Britain and northern Ireland next spring and, "if the war lasts," a complete expeditionary force to Africa and possibly Europe by July, 1943.

Wheeler to Ask Inquiry

Earlier President Roosevelt declined to comment on the Tribune story, but indicated that Stimson would have something to say. When reporters asked the latter about the matter, he said he would like to ask them these two questions:

"1. What would you think of an American general staff which in the present condition of the world did not investigate and study every conceivable type of emergency which may confront this country and every possible method of meeting that emergency?

"2. What do you thing of the patriotism of a man or a newspaper which would take those confidential studies and make them public to the enemies of this country?"

Then he gave his own answer to the latter question, reading the following statement:

"The publications made yesterday are of unfinished studies of our production requirements for national defense which have been carried on by the general staff as a part of their duties in this emergency. They have never constituted an authorized program of the Government."

Gratifying to Hitler

"While their publication will doubtless be of gratification to our potential enemies and a possible source of impairment and embarrassment to our national defense, the chief evil of their publication is the revelation that there should be among us any group so lacking in appreciation of the danger that confronts the country and so wanting in loyalty and patriotism to their Government that they would be willing to take and publish such papers."

Stimson declined to amplify his prepared statement.

No comment was forthcoming as to the progress of the investigation under way to discover what Government source turned over the documents to the Chicago Tribune.

During the House debate on the defense appropriation bill yesterday Representative Lambertson (Republican), of Kansas, suggested the White House might have let the story "leak" in an effort to "cow Japan."

Representative Hare (Democrat), of South Carolina, declared that in the absence of other evidence it was "reasonable to conclude" the data had come from "Hitler."

Representative Fish (Republican), of New York, said he refused to believe that President Roosevelt had given his support to an A. E. F., but declared that if he or members of Congress favored such a step, "let them say so and settle the issue at the next election."

Story of A. E. F. Plans 'Being Studied' in Berlin

Berlin, Dec. 5 (AP)—Reports of a secret war plan for an American expeditionary force of 5 million men for an offensive against Germany by July 1, 1943, is "being studied," an official spokesman said today.

"We see the thing in two ways," the German spokesman said.

"First, as a piquant, delightful idea bordering on idiocy; second, as a possible real, honest idea advanced just like the plan to sterilize the German people."

He added that "if the Yankees some years from now come marching through the desert sands toward Europe, they just will have to be dealt with."

U. S. Ferry Pilot Killed as Bomber Crashes, Burns

Camas, Wash., Dec. 5 (AP).—Lieut. Harry O'Neil was killed today in the crash of a Douglas medium bomber, one of a squadron of 18 bearing R. A. F. markings.

The planes, flying up the Columbia River gorge for an undisclosed destination, were forced back by bad weather. O'Neil's plane crashed and burned on nearby Prune Hill.

The son of George Blanchard, Prune Hill farmer, said the plane struck the ground within 75 feet of where he was standing in his own yard.

The bombers checked out of McChord Field air base near Tacoma last night. The pilots were members of the ferrying command which helps deliver the ships to England.

Expert Advice Needn't Fear Air Attacks, Japan Told

By Otto D. Tolischus

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Dec. 5.—Revealing what he represented as a complete line-up of the air strength of the ABCD powers in the Far East Rear Admiral Toshio Matsunaga, chief of the marine department of the Japan Airways Co., assured the Japanese people through the newspaper Yomiuri that they need not fear the encirclement front, because it was lacking in suitable air bases, effective planes and a trained personnel.

He put the whole air strength of the ABCD powers in the Far East at 1000 planes—250 American, 400 British and the rest mostly trainers. Of these, he said, about 50 of the American planes were distributed in the Philippines, and 350 of the British in Burma, though additional American bombers to the value of twenty-four million dollars are to go to the Netherlands East Indies.

In contrast, the Japanese navy recently announced that it alone has 4000 planes.

Moreover, said Admiral Matsunaga, most of the types possessed by the ABCD powers are old or short-range planes which could not possibly bomb Japan and get back to their base, excepting about 20 Consolidated PBY-28 bombers which have appeared in the Pihlippines, Singapore and Sourabaya. These, he admits, are reported to possess the greatest flying capacity in the world at present, but he says even they will not be able to perform what is expected of them.

He says the B-17 Boeing "air fortresses," of which about 20 were sent to the Philippines, are old B and C types with a range of 2200 miles, which is insufficient to reach Japan, from Manila, and return. The maximum capacity of Lockheed Hudson planes, of which the Dutch are proud, he says, would be to fly from Singapore to Hanoi. Of the 100 Curtiss Hawk P-40 fighters to be sent to Chungking, only four or five have arrived so far.

The British Blenheim bombers and Hurricane fighters, he classifies as second-rate planes, and the American Ryan plane, in his estimate, is good only for training.

The only really superior planes in his view are the American Brewster dive-bombers which were recently shipped to the Netherlands East Indies and which are reputed to be far superior to the German dive-bombers.

"For all of these reasons," he concluded, "we can place full confidence in our preparations."

Australia Puts Pacific War Plans in Effect

By the Associated Press

Melbourne, Australia, Dec. 5 — Australia's war cabinet hurriedly reassembled today on receipt of overseas advices indicating the Pacific crisis had reached a new and graver stage, and immediately ordered carried out a long-standing plan for military cooperation with the United States, Britain and the Netherlands East Indies.

The nature of all but a few of the defense decisions was kept secret. It was hinted, however, that Australia's ships may have to be convoyed in the Pacific.

It was stressed officially, however, that the action "does not mean that war is inevitable" with Japan.

Certain precautionary measures involving home defense were made public by Premier John Curtin and army authorities. They included:

1. Cancellation of Christmas leave for troops and air force personnel in the Darwin area of north Australia, nearest to the East Indies.

2. Ordering of a million gas masks for the civil population.

3. Measures to provide for a full-time personnel of officers and non-commissioned officers for a volunteer defense corps, composed of men aged 18 to 60 who are ineligible for service in the militia or air force.

Reservists at Posts In Dutch East Indies

The Melbourne Herald, according to a Melbourne broadcast, said:

"The main purpose of today's meeting of the war cabinet was to complete the elaborate and complicated mechanism which will be set in motion by the service chiefs if war should come to the Pacific."

In the Netherlands East Indies, other last-minute preparations were made to meet an emergency. The 1000-man police reserve was mobilized, including motorized and bicycle units. The Navy announced the fleet was at full wartime strength, with adequate reservists on duty. Batavia went calmly about its celebration of St. Nichoals Day, which in Dutch territory falls on December 5.

In Thailand, perhaps most directly menaced by the tense situation between Japan on one side and the "ABCD" bloc on the other, the national assembly accepted an urgent government ill giving the government decree powers in times of emergency. Among the other things the government wants these powers to suppress Fifth Column activities.

of joint defense between Japan and France."

There was no indication after these conferences that the Japanese note had brightened in any degree the outlook in the Pacific. Late in the day, without comment, the White House released the text of the note.

The Japanese contended reports of their military activity in Indo-China had been "exaggerated" and stated that the recent additions to their forces in the French Asiatic colony do not exceed the number permitted by their agreement with Vichy.

No public announcement of the full terms of the Vichy-Tokyo "protocol of joint defense" has ever been made, but estimates of the strength of the Japanese forces which were permitted last summer to establish bases in Indo-China have ranged from 25,000 to 50,000.

Last week official reports reaching Washington indicated that more than 100,000 Japanese troops are now in Indo-China, and President Roosevelt on Tuesday asserted that more were on the way.

He charged flatly that the latest troop movements violated the Japanese agreement with Vichy and gave his press conference a picture of formidable Japanese preparations in the Indo-China area—on land, sea and in the air.

President Roosevelt, when he announced four days ago that he was asking Tokyo to explain the purpose behind the military activity in Indo-China, rejected in advance any suggestion that the reinforcements were necessary to police Indo-China, which he called a very peaceful country.

Though the Tokyo note does not use the "policing" or "preservation of order" arguments, diplomatic quarters here thought it unlikely that President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull would regard the Japanese explanation as satisfactory.

The note, it was pointed out, contains no direct denial that the Japanese troops in Indo-China may be used to attack Thailand or British Burma.

A Chinese spokesman here denounced the Japanese note as "a very lame excuse."

He readily conceded that there have been Chinese "troop movements" in Chinese territory north of the Indo-China frontier, but said these preparations were "defense measures" necessitated by the Japanese action last summer in taking over Indo-China bases which "were a menace to the Yunnan province."

In Tokyo, meanwhile, an official spokesman for the Japanese government expressed "amazement" at what he called a "big misunderstanding on the part of the United States Government regarding our policy in the Far East."

He said Secretary Hull, in asserting Wednesday that Japan is pursuing a policy of conquest and military despotism, had "misunderstood our fundamental policy."

"If there is no sincerity there is no need to continue the conversations," he said, referring to the Hull-Kurusu negotiations, in Washington, but he expressed belief that both governments would "continue with sincerity to try to find a common formula for a peaceful solution in the Pacific."

In Washington yesterday Nomura and Kurusu told State Department reporters they were hopeful that the conversations with Hull would continue.

"As far as we are concerned," Nomura said, "we are always willing to talk—after all we are a peaceful nation."

Secretary Hull, leaving the Cabinet meeting, told reporters at the White House he had no further appointment with the Japanese envoys for the present. It was thought here that he is not likely to meet with them again until they are ready to present the Japanese reply to Hull's note of November 26.

Gaston Henry-Haye, the French Ambassador, called on Undersecretary of State Welles yesterday for what he said was a general discussion of the situation, which presumably included Japanese military activity in French Indo-China.

The text of the White House announcement follows:

The President's Day

ANSWER COMING UP: Along with the President's second cup of coffee in his White House study yesterday morning came an unslept, tired Secretary of State Hull for a final powwow with Mr. Roosevelt before the Japanese answer to that fine old American question, "What's cooking?" in Indo-China. While the correspondents shifted feet outside the Executive office door for a half hour, Hull and the President thought of all the possible answers, selected a few likely ones for detailed planning.

BRUSH OFF: Looking very snappy in a new green tweed suit, solemn only in the mourning arm band, Mr. Roosevelt was polite, mildly affable and completely uncommunicative at his press conference. The correspondents left with a meatless bone to gnaw on.

UNDERTONE: A low, persistent hum of labor action was heard by the pointed ears of the White House watchers. On Thursday two of labor's satallites took up quite a slice of Presidential schedule, yesterday C. I. O.'s keyman Van A. Bittner showed up, stayed overtime. After the Cabinet meeting, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins waited after the others a full 20 minutes.

CONGRESSIONAL QUESTIONS: Congressional Lyndon Johnson, Texan fair-haired boy of the Administration, popped in to chat with the boss, probably on the possibility of running again for the Senate seat he lost to "Pass the Biscuits Pappy" O'Daniel.

BANKERS, TOO: Henry W. Koeneke, Ponca City, Oklahoma's financial whiz and new president of the American Bankers Association, led in by former A. B. A. Chief Robert Fleming, assured the President, among other things, that bankers, like all other American citizens, will help in every way possible during this emergency. Congressman Arthur G. Klein of N. Y. whooshed in and out.

REPORT: Back for lunch came Hull, report in hand and head. Over the President's desk passed hot rolls, firm resolutions on the Japanese stymie. When the Cabinet gathered, in full, plus Administrators LaGuardia and McNutt, the President and his Secretary of State moved into the Cabinet room for an hour and a half of further serious careful discussion of the Pacific situation.

NO HOST: While Mrs. Roosevelt presided over a dinner party of 112 guests including Actress Luise Rainer, the President dined upstairs off a tray, kept on the telephone, worked steadily until the last guest had been long gone, the lights turned low.

Waves of Attackers Beating on German Lines Without Gain

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Dec. 5.—Seemingly endless waves of Russian attackers above the Sea of Azov now are beating without gain against a solid German line, Nazi military authorities announced tonight.

The mighty Russian smash thus has been "fought to a standstill," one spokesman said, and the Russians are no longer able to push their fighting lines westward, although they still are attacking repeatedly. Germany's line, the spokesman said, indefinitely, "lies east of Taganrog."

German dispatches made much of Russia's alleged losses in the southern fighting, but gave no intimation of the cost to Germany and her allies. It was noted, however, there were increasing German references to Italian and Slovak troops in the region west of Rostov.

It's 13 Below Zero

From the Moscow front the main news, in the German view, was the weather—13 below zero, Fahrenheit. German dispatches insisted this "hampered but did not halt German operations and more progress was made." Details again were absent.

Leningrad was subjected to an unusually violent artillery bombardment. German observers said that there were spectacular explosions in munitions stores and that great fires raged. The Russians in that area, a German dispatch said, made their daily attempt to cross the ice of the Neva River in the direction of the German lines. The Germans made the unvarying report that it was repulsed.

The agency D. N. B. also reported that a thin column of Russian reinforcements, proceeding toward Leningrad across the ice of Lake Ladoga, was bombed by German planes.

4000 Square Miles Regained by Reds

u...s and a corps of Croat volunteers had arrived on the Taganrog front to bolster the hard-put Germans.

Cossacks and Mongols

(The Rome newspaper Il Giornale D'Italia said Russian Cossack and Mongol troops attacking in 30 inches of snow were violently pounding mining and industrial centers occupied by the Fascists in the Donets Basin.

(The newspaper account asserted that battalions of dismounted Cossacks, Turkmen and Mongolians newly arrived from the Urals, Iran and the Caucasus "showed excess attacking spirit" but that all their thrusts were bloodily repulsed.)

The Germans, desperately counter-attacking, were reported sweating under unending Soviet fire in unsuccessful efforts to throw up fortifications backed by artillery in the hope of slowing the Red advance everywhere long enough to find support from farther to the west and the Crimea.

The line along the Mius, which flows from a point east of Stalino south almost to Taganrog and then turns and empties into the Taganrog Gulf through a wide estuary, west of the town, was by Russian accounts dissolving almost as it was formed.

Seek to Divert Strength

Perhaps in the ultimate hope of diverting some of Timoshenko's strength, the central Nazi armies were meanwhile assaulting the Moscow defenses with a new violence and in this theater Soviet dispatches plainly indicated the Russians were in a most serious position.

Both above and west of Moscow sharp German advances were acknowledged and the Moscow radio reported baldly that the situation was "threatening."

Powerful new Nazi charges broke through the Solnetschnogorski sector to the vicinity of Dmitrov, which lies but 40 miles directly above the capital on a subsidiary railroad to Leningrad.

On the west, synchronized assaults by the invader thrust out a salient, by breaking through the Soviet defenses at Mozhaisk, to the area of Naro Fominsk, 40 miles southwest of Moscow.

Two Villages Overrun

North of the capital, the German break through was on the right Moscow flank just below Klin and in this general area the Germans also were acknowledged to have overrun two villages about Volokolamsk, which is 65 miles northwest of Moscow.

Both here and to the west, however, it was claimed that far-spread Russian counterattacks had checked the initial German advances. Such counterattacks were said also to have improved the Red position in the Tula sector.

Indications that Hitler, facing disaster in the south and making no progress whatever in the long siege of Leningrad, was going all-out for Moscow were supported by Russian estimates that 15 armored German divisions of perhaps 180,000 men were in action against the city's defense arc.

Bullitt Named To General Aniline Board

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

New York, Dec. 5.—William C. Bullitt, president Roosevelt's special Ambassador to the Near Eastern battle area, was elected a director of the General Aniline & Film Corporation today in the latest move in the process of Americanizing the formerly German-controlled corporation.

Bullitt succeeds William vom Rath, son of Walther vom Rath, of I. G. Farbenindustrie, the German Dye Trust, whose resignation was disclosed last Sunday.

Bullitt's election, reflecting the personal interest of President Roosevelt in the corporation's future, was announced today before it actually took place. John E. Mack, who was elected president of General Aniline last October 31, among other reasons because of his close personal friendship with the President, made the announcement at 10:30 a. m. in the company's offices. The directors met at 4 p. m. and elected Bullitt.

Asked whether the United States Government had taken a hand in the selection of Bullitt for the vacancy, Mack said: "Inasmuch as Bullitt is the personal representative of the President, flying with ambassadorial status, you can draw your own inferences." Both Bullitt and Mack are known to have conferred with the President recently.

Mack said "a whole lot of things" entered into the selection of Bullitt, including his dynamic personality, his wide business experience, and the fact that he had "no connection with the German interest." He added that Bullitt would return from the Near East in 30 days to take an active part in the management of General Aniline.

With the addition of Bullitt, the board of directors of General Aniline is now composed of seven native Americans, four naturalized citizens who were born in Germany and one Swiss citizen, Dr. Felix Iselin.

Dr. Iselin, who is also the legal representative of the German Dye Trust in Switzerland and president of I. G. Chemie, a Swiss holding company which claims 91 per cent ownership of General Aniline, has been at Lisbon for more than a month trying to get passage on the Pan-American clipper to come to the United States.

Mack said the company, which is nominally capitalized at 60 million dollars but is believed to be worth far more than that, is now doing more than half its business with the United States Government, supplying khaki dyes for military uniforms and photographic supplies and apparatus for the Army and Navy.

British Repulse African Attacks

New Zealand units destroyed two more tanks, killed 100 Germans and captured 100 prisoners west of Menastir in the frontier zone.

(A Berlin dispatch said the Germans in Libya were content to leave the initiative up to the British in the attempt to make a junction with Tobruk, but said Nazi dive-bombers raided tank concentrations in southern Libya "where conceivably another British offensive is in the making.")

The R. A. F. reported widespread attacks over the entire battle area as far west as the Gulf of Sirte, south of Bengasi, and north across the Mediterranean to San Giovanni in southern Italy, where their bombs "burned out a train of 24 gasoline tankers."

This air action coupled with British naval raiding has destroyed or damaged at least 60 per cent of all Axis supplies sent to Libya, Commodore J. H. Edelstein, chief of staff for naval operations in the eastern Mediterranean, said in an interview aboard his flagship Queen Elizabeth.

Meanwhile 1000 more Axis prisoners arrived here en route to Nile Valley internment camps, where 7000 others have been sent since the British began their invasion November 18.

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—The Vichy-controlled radio at Dakar, French West Africa, said today that "after the discussions between Reichmarshal Goering and Chief of State Petain, Dakar, more than ever before, remains the defense bastion of the recreated Europe." NBC heard the broadcast.

Serbs Smash Panzer Unit; Nazis Retreat

Copyright by the New York Times

Ankara Turkey, Dec. 5.—The war in Serbia is raging with increased violence according to intelligence reports received by foreign military sources here describing heavy fighting in the Morava Valley, south and western Serbia and across the reaches of the Danube lowlands east of Belgrade.

The strong forces of Gen. Draga Mikhailovitch counterattacked a German armored column in the snowy heights above Uzice in western Serbia and, according to late reports here, encircled and destroyed nine tanks and three armored cars, forcing the Germans to retreat eastward toward Chakchak. Separate guerrilla Chetnik units under Gen. Mikhailovitch's command, fell upon the rear of a German motorized column near Prokupia in south Serbia, dispersing the troop lorries and wiping out an entire battalion of German infantry.

In heavy fighting at Goloubatz in eastern Serbia on the Danube mixed Chetnik and Serbian loyalist army troops repelled a determined attack by German tanks and Premier Gen. Milan Neditch's Fascist infantry, according to today's reports.

German claims issued from Belgrade declare that 1500 Chetnik and Loyalist troops were killed in the Uzice and Prokupia fighting.

Reports dealing with the penetration of a Bulgarian infantry division into eastern Serbia in the Nish sector are still incomplete and it is believed that—although bitter fighting between Serbs and Bulgars already has been reported—the clashes thus far have been confined to patrols and that the main column from Bulgaria has not yet met the strong reinforcements rushed toward Nish by Gen. Mikhailovitch.

The first official war communique issued from Yugoslav general headquarters at Cairo on Thursday confirmed details of the Uzice and Morava Valley fighting, indicating that the Germans are attempting a major offensive in central and southern Serbia with three of the five Wehrmacht divisions now in Yugoslavia. Another German division is moving west into Croatia for transport to Montenegro, it is reported, to begin a campaign against the powerful guerrilla army operating in the mountains about Cetinje and Berane.

Following repairs on the important Belgrade-Nish-Skoplje rail line, dynamited in two places last week by Chetnik guerrillas, the Germans are now running armored trains ahead of all troop and munitions trains bound for Salonika, Sofia and the embarkation ports at Greece and Varna and Burgas on the Black Sea.

Sidelights on the War

British Bobbie Suggests Use Of Old Tanks to Fight Fires

Copyright by New York Times

London, Dec. 5.—The suggestion that old tanks could be converted into machines for fire fighting during air raids was made in London by a policeman today. The constable suggested that the tanks could be lined with asbestos and carry two asbestos-covered hose to fight fires from points much nearer than is at present possible.

He pointed out that by using tanks the men would be afforded good protection against falling walls, bomb-shell splinters, machine-gunning and incendiaries, while being able to pass over heaps of debris to get close to a fire.

What Are Their Rates?

Vichy, Dec. 5 (U.P.).—Dog-drawn taxicabs have appeared on the streets of Paris because the lack of fuel has forced the withdrawal of motor vehicles and most harness-horses have been sent to the slaughterhouse.

A 1925 law prohibiting the use of dogs for traction power has been canceled and a new police ordinance permits "canimobile" taxis, provided they be drawn by huskies fitted with painless harnesses.

The use of terriers or smaller dogs for traction is still forbidden.

Russian Lottery

Kuibyshev, Russia, Nov. 29 (delayed) (AP).—The commissariat of finance announced today the opening of a huge lottery in which prizes will be cash or goods.

Ten-ruble tickets (about $2) were placed on sale for a drawing March 1, 1942.

Prizes range from 100 to 50,000 rubles in cash or from one silk dress to 500 fur coats in commodities.

Falls Afoul of Irish

London, Dec. 5 (INS).—Rolando L. Wolfe, who was born at McGhee, Ark., in 1918, is the first pilot officer of the American Eagle Squadron fighting with the British to be interned in Eire, it was revealed today.

He was interned November 22 after his plane crashed in a bog.

Wolfe, a pilot officer of the Second American Eagle Squadron, now is in a hospital at Letterkenny, County Donegal.

'The Slower the Quicker'

London, Dec. 5 (AP).—Europe's "V for victory" army, which the British estimate at 200 million, were told tonight by "Col. Britton," radio originator of the campaign of Nazi harassment, to switch from passive to active resistance in the German-occupied countries.

The time has come, he said over the B. B. C., for the army to form in small platoons to "help each other."

He also urged that factory workers lose their tools and that office workers muddle and miscalculate. "The slower you work the quicker you'll win," he said.

View Rocket Plane

Copyright by New York Times

Rome, Dec. 5.—Romans this afternoon were given an opportunity to view the new propellerless rocket plane which is claimed to represent a great step forward in the development of aviation.

The silver-colored streamlined machine circled for about an hour above the capital. It flew at a very high speed and at an altitude of about 500 yards, so that its characteristics could be clearly seen as well as the silhouette of Col. Mario de Bernardi, its pilot.

New German Seaplane

Berlin, Dec. 5 (AP).—A new three-engined reconnaissance seaplane which already is in production was pictured in the German press tonight.

The plane has a light double-fin fuselage and one of its three junkers Diesel motors is directly above the glassy, boat-shaped cabin. Its body construction permits defense from all sides.

Shipping Losses Show Greatest Decrease

London, Dec. 5 (AP).—Naval circles expressed belief tonight that November shipping losses in the Atlantic were probably the lowest since the fall of France, perhaps less than 100,000 tons, compared to the 180,000 tons a month officially declared lost from July through October.

New British shipbuilding has been averaging approximately 80,000 tons a month, they said.

Nazi Captain Quits Sinking Sub and Crew

By the Associated Press

London, Dec. 5.—The British admiralty issued an account tonight of the sinking of a German submarine in which it said the German commander jumped aboard an attacking Canadian corvette, "abandoning his boat and crew in a scramble for his own life."

The U-boat, identified as the U-501, first of a new series of 740-ton vessels, had been brought to the surface by depth charges when the commander, identified by the admiralty as Capt. Hugo Forster, escaped to safety aboard the corvette Moosejaw.

The Moosejaw and another corvette, the Chambly, tried to ram the submarine, the admiralty account went on, but the attempt failed. It was on the Moosejaw's approach that Forster jumped, the admiralty said. The Moosejaw then opened fire on the U-boat and the crew took to the water. Thirty-seven were saved and ten lost.

The admiralty commented that Forster's "jumping for safety without a thought for his crew caused considerable discussion among the hundreds of U-boat prisoners now in our hands."

Britain Declares War on Finland

been received from the Axis satellites, and the foreign office statement followed within an hour.

News reports from Bucharest and Budapest said Rumania and Hungary were formally standing by Germany in the war on Russia.

Cleavage With Finland Difficult Step for British

The cleavage between Britain and Finland was the most difficult because Finland, long regarded as a little stalwart in the camp of democratic sympathizers, had been the latest of the three nations to throw in with the Axis as an anti-Comintern state.

Finland entered into the war in an active way only some days after Germany commenced her invasion of Russia on June 22 and then, according to Finnish pronouncements, only to regain territory lost to Russia and to establish a strong defense against any Russian attack in the future.

To most of the world Finland then appeared only to be paying off a score for the Russian attack in the winter of 1939-40.

When Finland, with Germany's help, seemed to have recovered nearly all the territory lost to Russia the United States attempted to mediate to take Finland out of the war.

But Finland held that her objectives had not yet been fully assured and, in her official utterances, appeared to count on the territorial guarantees that would come through a German victory. On November 25 Finland signed the anti-Comintern Pact which Germans envisage as the groundwork for postwar reconstruction of Europe. She has not yet formally adhered to the Three-Power Pact of Germany, Italy and Japan.

Secretary of State Hull flatly declared on November 28 that Finland had become a puppet of Adolf Hitler—a view in which the British concurred.

British relations with Rumania and Hungary long had been predicated on the sheer desirability of preserving informative, diplomatic contacts with two members of both the Axis and anti-Comintern pacts. They have been in the war against Russia since the beginning.

Rumania was considered definitely lost as a potential British ally when Marshal Ion Antonescu, a Nazi favorite, wrested supreme rule from King Carol and sent Carol into exile, replacing him with his son, Mihai, a figurehead ruler. That was in September, 1940.

Hungary, because of her geographical position and bonds with the Axis, had rarely been looked on as more than a low hurdle for the Germans in their thrusts to the east. She became a full junior partner of the Axis in November, 1940.

Two Nazi Officers Attacked As Paris Defies Ultimatum

By the Associated Press

Vichy, Unoccupied France, Dec. 5.—Parisians defied stern German ultimatums today and made at least two new attacks on Nazi officers in the occupied capital.

Coincident with the presence in Paris of the Vichy vice premier, Admiral Darlan, for continued negotiations with the conquerors, these outbreaks were reported:

1. A German major was shot and seriously wounded in the hip by a cyclist on the Rue de Seine, in the St. Germain district. The cyclist escaped.

2. Another officer was fired upon by a band of men at suburban Issy-les-Moulineaux, near the Versailles gate. He was unhurt.

Rear Admiral Rene Bard, Paris prefect of police, issued a new appeal to the people to help capture the authors of the recent series of assaults.

At the time of today's attacks, Paris was under an ultimatum from Lieut. Gen. Ernst von Schaumburg, the German military commander in Paris, to find the perpetrators of previous attacks by December 10 or suffer dire consequences to the population as a whole.

The St. Germain quarter, where the most serious of today's attacks took place, is a Bohemian Left Bank section containing a fine arts school, private art galleries and picturesque bookshops and cafes much frequented in the past by American visitors.

A German bookshop there recently was dynamited and there have been two recent explosions nearby in the Latin quarter.

There also have been incidents lately on the Right Bank. Two Nazis were killed in a German army establishment in Montmartre and a German officer was shot on the night of December 2 on the Boulevard Magenta.

Grand Hotel
Night Life Is Limited In Kuibyshev

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Kuibyshev, Russia, Nov. 29 (delayed).—There's plenty of night in Kuibyshev, alternate capital of the U. S. S. R., because the sun slides early into the west behind the leaden Volga.

There's plenty of life because almost a million people dwell where only a few hundred thousand formerly lived but—night life is limited.

The center of activity is the Grand Hotel, where after dinner diplomats, soldiers of many nations, certain soviets and newsmen gather.

The building is a gray, squat affair in the city's main street, overlooking the river.

Grand Hotel's life is crowded into two rooms. At one end of the smaller room plays an orchestra which is a sort of corny outfit with slowed down waltz tempo.

The band plays American tunes for dancing but significantly, the seven musicians outnumber the ladies dancing.

You can get a fine meal for $4 or $5—bread, butter, chicken, goose, lamb, mutton, sturgeon, herring, excellent soups, pastries, tea and beer and a limited amount of vodka.

Street life is a mixture of ice, Asia, Europe and crowded thoroughfares.

Street scene—Dromedaries pulling a tiny wheeled wagon along one side of the road, a horse drawing sledges up the other side—happy children skating and sledding amid the beaverlike industry of their elders—a nattily attired Red army soldier beside a flashy Polish soldier.

Professional entertainment includes two ballet shows, one local and one from Moscow. The music is excellent, the performance well done, but costuming naturally is limited.

Barber shops and beauty parlors flourish and you see women in several places getting manicures.

Stores offer a surprisingly, at least to me, number of things. No clothes are rationed. An abundance of games, toys and ice skates are available, also a limited number of musical instruments.

A shop run for foreigners supplies us with tasty tomato juice, eggs, bacon, ham, jam and jellies. You can get a nice chocolate bar for 75 cents.

I have personally seen at least one church open and attracting large congregations.

Hotel rooms, which are cold to Americans used to central heating, are generally good. Hot water is available for the asking. Portable wash basins are provided in some rooms.

There are adequate public baths, which you reserve ahead of time.

Concentration Poses Supply Problem for 49 German Divisions

By C. L. Sulzberger

Kuibyshev, Russia, Dec. 5.—According to Soviet war correspondents the Red command has noticed indications that Marshal Fedor von Bock is again seeking to regroup his forces on the Moscow front and to be trying, by narrowing their sphere of activity still further, to increase their pressure against Gen. Gregory Zhukoff's depth defenses.

Thus new units supported by tanks have not only been thrown into the Volokolamsk and Klin salients where the greatest Nazi pressure had been exerted last week, but new efforts apparently are starting on the Mozhaisk and the Naro Fominsk salients as well as in the Maloyarslavets area, which lies between.

Col. Gen. Heinz Guderian's sudden sally with considerable weight of armor east of Tula in the direction of Stalinogorsk seems to have been effectively stopped and not only made it appear that the surprise element which is vitally necessary in any such sweep far south and east of Moscow has been eleminated but that the Soviet tank and cavalry counterattacks have properly frustrated the Nazi tank expert's audacious effort.

War of Great Intensity

Thus the situation seems to have resolved once more into a grinding warfare of great intensity along what may now be termed the main Moscow front, ranging in a horse shoe about the capital from Naro Fominsk through Mozhaisk to the Volokolamsk and Klin salients with what may be termed corollary battles about Tula to the south and Kalinin to the north. Both of those cities are relatively far from Moscow but the battles about them are intimately related to the supply and communications of both armies.

Just how Marshal von Bock can possibly concentrate any more troops into the most important areas involved would appear to be somewhat of a mystery. Each square mile can absorb just so many units and it is now estimated that the Germans have between 45 and 50 divisions in the capital area. The newspaper, Red Star, "guesses" 49; the official spokesman, S. A. Lozovsky, says 50.

This correspondent can vouch for the identifications of 39 Wehrmacht divisions on the central front and is certain there are probably about 10 more.

Terrain Favors Russians

It is extremely difficult to see how Marshal von Bock can squeeze together this enormous army in any more concentrated area or how he can feed and supply it if he should succeed. The terrain around Moscow favors the Russian artillery—which is generally believed to be stronger than the Germans'—because of the wide field of vision and because a barrage can be laid down in any direction without any natural obstruction.

The closer together he packs his troops the more difficult becomes his supply problem because of the smaller network of immediately available roads leading from behind the lines' railroad junctions.

This factor has already hampered the Germans greatly. It is estimated by experts that the Germans must bring up to the front in this area between 1000 and 1200 freight cars each 24 hours to keep this gigantic army functioning. There are many indications that reserve supply stocks which were deposited in forward depots before Marshal von Bock began this latest push almost three weeks ago have been exhausted in several cases; both batteries and tank units have been reported without ammunition or fuel.

Can Deal With Panzers

It is obvious, if Soviet information regarding closer packing is correct, that the Germans feel that they can solve this problem but just how remains a mystery.

The Moscow front—as that near Rostov—has proven that the Reds are fully capable of dealing with the famous Nazi panzer divisions which made such a mess of France and the Low Lands.

The German blitzkrieg experts—of whom Col. Gen. Paul von Kleist, Col. Gen. Heinz Guderian and Gen. Erwin Rommel, who is in Africa, are among the leading exponents—at the beginning of this war counted on swift, sweeping tactics which, in football parlance, are similar to an end run or, at best, an off-tackle play. The Russians are now halting such moves and are forcing the Germans to limit their bag of tricks mainly to line plunges which not only vastly reduce their gains because of the weight of the Russian line but exact the heaviest of casualties.

By forcing this alteration in the German tactics the Russians are able to channel tanks into routes which are covered by extremely tough depth defenses and, day after day, as panzer units are flung into these, they are generally able, at best, only to register limited gains. The Reds "stormer" aircraft with its heavy armor and powerful offensive weapons have wrecked great havoc among such units as Gen. Guderian's when they try to pull fast "sweep-around" flanks.

Hemisphere Chiefs May Confer on U. S.-Japan Crisis

Santiago, Chile, Dec. 5 (AP).—Diplomatic discussions are under way to arrange a meeting of South American presidents as well as a conference of foreign ministers of all American republics because of the possibility of a United States-Japanese conflict, informed sources said tonight.

No information as to the precise object of the meetings was disclosed by these sources, but presumably it other hemisphere powers toward such a war.

An extraordinary meeting of the presidents of Argentina, Brazil, Chile and Peru at Buenos Aires is under discussion, it was said, and Foreign Minister Juan Rosetti, of Chile, was quoted as saying that "I cannot conceal the fact that there are prospects of two international conferences of great importance."

Bridge Collapse . . Toll Reaches 10

Hartford, Conn., Dec. 5 (INS).—The total known dead in the tragic Connecticut River bridge span collapse reached ten today while a search was continued for the bodies of at least three others.

As police revealed they believed there may be still another victim, making a possible loss of life of 14, a three-fold investigation was begun into the mishap which hurled a heavy span crane and construction workers down into the river.

State Highway Commissioner William J. Cox said his "guess" would be that the loss of the steel span itself would be about 5 per cent of the $1,235,000 contract for the structural work. Total cost of the bridge approximates $4,200,000.

Fish Testifies in Nazi Agent Inquiry

room, Fish was accompanied by Attorney William F. Cusick, one of the lawyers defending Hill in the perjury case. Fish declined to talk to reporters during the 15 minutes he waited in the witness room.

After he testified, Fish hurried back to the witness room, where he waited alone while Cusick found him a taxicab. Fish was grave and did not appear pleased. Prosecutors Hickey and Maloney and Grand Jury Foreman John S. Gorrell were equally taciturn, but appeared gratified by the day's developments.

Following the Fish testimony, the grand jurors adjourned their investigation until Tuesday, December 16. In the interval, the propaganda squad of the Department of Justice special prosecutors will press its inquiries both in Washington and other cities.

Still sought for questioning is Ralph Townsend, who disappeared after the grand jurors started investigating Scribner's Commentator and the Herald, anti-interventionist publication of Lake Geneva, Wis. One Scribner's executive testified that shortly before Townsend vanished he was given a copy of the secretly compiled mailing list of the interventionist, to which letters mailed to Fish were said to have been contributed.

The grand jurors have examined Fish's other secretary, Walter L. Reynolds, who was treasurer of Fish's National Committee to Keep America Out of Foreign Wars. A few days after the House authorized Fish to tell the grand jurors what he knows, it was Reynolds who announced that the Fish office had been burglarized and the files rifled. Later Reynolds said nothing was missing and the matter appears to have been dropped.

Fish's second secretary, Hill, will go on trial January 7 on an indictment charging two counts of corrupt perjury. Hill is alleged to have sworn falsely when he denied knowing Viereck and when he denied storing eight mailbags of evidence in a room used by Fish. Hill eventually surrendered the eight bags to the grand jury.

U. S.-Japan at End Of Talk, He Asserts

The United States and Japan have reached the end of negotiations, Wilfred Fleisher, correspondent for the New York Herald Tribune who spent several years in Japan, told an audience here last night.

Addressing Phi Kappa Alpha members at George Washington University the newspaperman declared there is "no ground for further discussion."

"Any standstill of agreement would mean that China would be 'sold down the river'," he added. "It would mean the United States has put a stamp of approval on Japan's occupation of the country (China)."

Colonel Lauds Guard, Reserve Officers' Work

The much maligned reserve officer and the greatly misunderstood selectee found a friend last night in Col. Louis L. Roberts, commander of the 139th Field Artillery.

And it was not necessarily because Col. Roberts is a reserve officer himself—he is on military leave from his job as city attorney of Evansville, Ind.

"Basically," Col. Roberts told some 200 municipal law officers in convention at the Mayflower Hotel, "the American soldier is but an American citizen in uniform. The fact that he is paid more as a private than a Japanese colonel doesn't mean a thing to him. In many respects he is still the young fellow across the street from where you live. In many other respects he is rapidly becoming a trained and disciplined soldier."

Guard, Reserve Officers Lauded

Of National Guard and reserve officers, Col. Roberts said:

"Without these hundred thousand reserve and National Guard officers, the mobilization and training of our present Army of one and one-half million men could not have made the progress it has.

"I say to you very frankly and candidly that exaggeration in the public mind of the actual relatively few cases of incompetency in officer leadership in our Army, which its training thus far has developed, and the unfortunate publicity given to the effort to provide the Army with the best officers obtainable, are not in the interest of good order and military dicipline.

"Our Army, in all its components, in all its arms and in all its ranks must have confidence in its leadership if soldiers' lives are to be conserved in the event of war. This confidence begins to break down when the Army is the subject of continued attack from civilian sources. Too many publications, some of wide national circulation, invite to their columns letters from disgruntled soldiers or feature the exceptional or isolated mistake or display of poor judgment in command, as the rule rather than the exception."

Declares Morale Good

Of army morale, Col. Roberts declared: "The plain unvarnished truth is that the morale of the Army, its fighting heart, its unity of purpose which should engage us all, is the shining light which all should follow in our defense effort."

Getting back to selectees, Col. Roberts said: "Do not misinterpret the soldiers' desire to be released from the Army as a guage of his morale.

"The Nation as a whole looks to the return to peaceful pursuits and so does he, but this does not mean he will not do the job for which he has been called.

Col. Roberts had this advice for the city attorneys and other legal lights in the audience:

"In this terrible drama of daily enactment, in this universal call for all-out defense, there is no place for a mere observer."

At an earlier session Mayor F. H. LaGuardia warned that the after-the-emergency would be much worse than the present emergency and a London official said he wouldn't put it past the Germans to bomb some of our cities in nuisance raids.

The convention—that of the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers continuing through today at the Mayflower Hotel—got a capsuled story of what London underwent in the blitz raids with implied lessons for American citizens from Emil Davies, chairman, London council.

The fire department of London, Davies said, has increased from 3000 to 30,000 personnel, and the ambulance service from 400 persons to 10,000.

52 Tank Killer Battalions Planned in Modernizing Move

By Charles Hurd
Copyright by New York Times

Establishment of 52 tank destroyer battalions, in the near future, was ordered by the War Department yesterday as the next step in modernizing the Army. These will be patterned after a provisional battalion already tested at Fort George G. Meade, Md., and in recent maneuvers in the South.

Plans also were announced to double the force of completed motorized divisions, increasing these from two to four in number and raising the personnel of this form of shock troops to about 60,000 men.

In addition to the 52 tank destroyers battalions, 10 more will be added "when personnel becomes available." These battalions are made up of motorized units including half track caterpillar armored trucks bearing 75-millimeter guns, jeeps and special service trucks, including big-tired "swamp buggies" with special anti-tank weapons and complete organizations.

A description of the new type of organization read in part as follows:

"The new battalions will replace the following units, which will revert to inactive status: Antitank platoons in Field Artillery battlions and regiments in continental United States; all Field Artillery 75-millimeter antitank batteries including 105 and 155 millimeter howitzer battalions or regiments in continental United States.

"Three types of battalion are to be formed. They are light battalion with towed weapons designed for operation with foot infantry divisions; light battalions with self-propelled weapons designed for attachment to cavalry and motorized divisions, and heavy battalions for attachment to armored divisions, Army corps and armies."

Three of the new battalions will be attached to Fort Meade, which has been designated as the center for a tank destroyer tactical and firing center, and a school for officers and enlisted men assigned to this specialty.

Doubling of the eventual strength of motorized Infantry divisions was ordered mare effective by so equipping the Sixth Division, at Fort Leonard Wood, Mo., and the Ninth Division, Fort Bragg, N. C. The Army at present has one fully motorized division, the Fourth, stationed at Camp Gordon, Augusta, Ga., and a partially motorized one, the Seventh, at Fort Ord, Calif.

Md., in mid-September for A. P. Hill Military Reservation in Caroline County, Va., for two weeks of maneuver. There it was the only one of three divisions to solve a difficult and complicated tactical problem involving a shuttle movement through a dangerous bottleneck in the road net, despite a lack of motor transport from which it still suffers.

Down here, in the corps-controlled phase of the maneuvers, the Twenty-ninth stood off the Twenty-eighth and Forty-fourth Divisions by a daring extension of its line and accomplished its defensive mission. A dangerous gap in the line was plugged by the District's 121st Engineers until infantry could be brought up and the battle was won by a change of plan at its height, a change dictated by the battlefield sense and tactical ingenuity of Maj. Gen. Milton A. Reckord, division commander.

Battle Won in 6 Hours

In the First Army-controlled exercise, the Twenty-ninth was placed on the left flank of the corps front abreast the Forty-fourth, against First Corps. The two divisions moved so rapidly, the Forty-fourth fully equipped with motor transport, the Twenty-ninth only partly equipped and shuttling, that First Corps was caught astride the Catawba River and the battle was won six hours after it started.

As a result of this movement, an artificial situation was created to keep the problem going, which resulted in field orders being changed four times in 24 hours. In that time the Twenty-ninth was to take the offensive, then to go on the defensive, then to make an attack through the Forty-fourth Division. While this difficult feat was under way, the division was ordered to make a daylight withdrawal, which it accomplished successfully.

In the next Army exercise the division marched across the Pee Dee River and back, both times in a single column, and was placed in a defensive position on the left of Second Corps. There, for one full day, the 176th Infantry (Virginia) held off the crack First Division and part of the Twenty-sixth and the 175th Infantry (Maryland) advanced deep into Twenty-sixth Division territory, capturing an important bridge. Next day the Eighty-eighth Brigade, with its artillery, forded Rocky River to press the attack.

The Twenty-Ninth, in the first phase of G. H. Q. maneuvers was placed in First Army reserve with the First Division and was used piecemeal to protect the Army's communications. The first day it captured a jeep which had crossed the Pee Dee on a tent fly and captured Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum, Army commander, 20 minutes before, and recovered Drum's papers and maps.

Attacking across the Pee Dee in the same battle, the Twenty-Ninth marched on road completely round the right of First Army, where it was forced to fight in two directions with its two brigades 40 miles apart. Gen. Reckord controlling operations of both brigades from his division command post. The Eighty-Eighth (Virginia) Brigade in this fight, stalled the First Armored Division in its tracks, while the Fifty-Eighth (Maryland) was attacking the Fourth (Motorized) Division 40 miles away. Both divisions fulfilled their missions.

In the final phase of the G. H. Q. maneuver, the Twenty-Ninth was placed at the hinge of Gen. Drum's projected turning movement against Fourth Corps. There it absorbed the shock of attack by the entire armored corps of two divisions attempting to delay Drum's aattack. Though the division lost every gun it had except two, the tanks did not get through.

Nazis Discard Blitz Tactics Before Moscow

By G. H. Archambault.
Copyright by New York Times.

Vichy, France, Dec. 5.—There is a feeling in competent neutral circles here that war operations have reached a turning point in Russia which is beginning to be discernible in its actual effects, and which is of exceeding importance in its repercussions. In brief, the German high command seems to be modifying a popular war strategy, elaborated at great pains during many years and for the application of which the Wehrmacht in its every branch has been sedulously trained. It need not be stressed that a change of doctrine and all it implies is no light matter in the middle of a campaign.

Realization has come gradually, "Blitzkrieg," with emphasis on massive use of the air arm, somewhat on the lines laid down some decades ago by the Italian theorist Gen. Douhet, had its day of success in conjunction with the employment of armored divisions to replace the former cavalry of exploration.

This system won out in Poland, in Flanders, in France; it was calculated to paralyze in short order an opponent inferior in men and material and imbued with the idea of defense rather than offense.

Russia's Size a Defense

"Blitzkrieg" meant pushing on ever farther, carving the opposing forces into small fragments to be dealth with by the motorized infantry following in the wake of the armored columns. The very vastness of Russia proved a defense against "blitzkrieg," which was conceived to last weeks at the most, but not months.

But it is not easy to change a doctrine which has served as a basis for the operations of an army of millions of men. So that the principles of "blitzkrieg" continue to be applied. Moreover, the momentum was sufficient to bring more success though possibly at greater cost. But when winter imposed a major restabilization, even the momentum ended.

It was proved that an aggressive air force had inestimable value in swift attacks, but that its use in a war of position, or of attrition, is each day more onerous and that in such conditions tanks revert to their original purpose of infantry manpower for support as was the case in the first World War. And the old adage becomes true once more: Only infantry can hold ground, be it won by artillery, by airplanes or by mechanized cavalry.

Observers here consider that all this may explain why the German high command, while persisting in its original circling movement against Moscow, has launched simultaneously against the city a frontal attack of gigantic proportions. German sources have in the past descanted on the magnitude of the forces thrown into the fray which, be it said in passing, is an indirect tribute to the stubbornness of the resistance offered.

Frontal attacks, it may be added, always have proved costly, while the problem they present is not so much to break through the enemy's lines as to exploit the initial success once a breach was made.

Court Voids Race-Hatred Law in Jersey

By the Associated Press

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 5.—The New Jersey Supreme Court today reversed the sentences of nine men accused of making or promoting anti-Jewish speeches at a German-American Bund rally, and held the State's race-hatred law was invalid because it conflicted with constitutional guarantees of free speech.

Among the nine were Wilhelm Kunze, the bund's national leader, and August Klapprott, leader for the Eastern Seaboard States. Klapprott was also manager of Camp Nordland, in rural Sussex County, where the rally was held.

"To denounce one's fellows or advocate hostility to them, or a group," said the court in an opinion by Chief Justice Thomas J. Brogan, "is as revolting to any fair-minded man as it is absurd and unjust to the mind of a thoughtful man; yet, to make the speaker amenable to the criminal law, his utterances must be such as to create a 'clear and present danger that will bring about the substantial evils' to society that the State has the right to prevent.

"The utterances must be such as constitute a danger to the State. We cannot say that the statements made by the plaintiffs-in-error were of this character."

The State's race-hatred law made it a misdemeanor to make utterances in the presence of two or more persons of "hatred, abuse, violence or hostility" against any race, color or creed.

Under New Jersey's judiciary set-up, the Supreme Court is not the highest tribunal and the State can carry the case to the Court of Errors and Appeals.

The camp, raided and closed by the Sussex sheriff, has since been sold to individuals.

Sentenced with Kunze and Klapprott were Leonard D. Clark, of New York, writers for a bund publication; the Rev. John C. Fitting, of Union City, State bund secretary; Matthias Kohler, of Irvington, State treasurer, and four camp trustees.

Power Restrictions Off After Heavy Rains

Recent heavy rains in the Southeastern section of the United States have made possible the removal of all power restrictions in that area, including the "blackout" of theater marquees and department store windows, OPM Priorities Director Donald M. Nelson announced yesterday.

Another important restriction which the rains permitted to be removed, Nelson said, was the "freezing" of electric power consumption by large industrial users. During the critical period of water, and hence power, shortage in the eight States affected, industries were restricted to the amounts of power used in September, a lower level than they ordinarily have maintained.

The rains, which in the last two days have already averaged from 1 to 3 inches, also removed the necessity of an additional 30 per cent curtailment which had been threatened.

Although Nelson ordered the continuation of a power pooling arrangement, which brought additional electrical energy into the affected area from points as far away as Texas and Illinois, it appeared that the recent downpour had definitely ended the shortage for this year.

Meanwhile, President Roosevelt expressed a hope at his press conference yesterday that another power shortage, threatened for 1943 in the Tennessee Valley defense area, would be averted by the construction of the Douglas Dam in east Tennessee.

The House Appropriations Committee refused to vote funds for the project on Wednesday. Mr. Roosevelt, however, said he hoped the Senate would restore the funds, since all defense agencies had agreed that the extra power was very essential for national defense.

House Weighs Law On 'Arms Brokers'

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

A House angered at disclosure of fat profits going to the nonproducing middlemen of the rearmament program yesterday heard demands for legislation removing "order solicitors" and "fair-haired fixers" from defense agency corridors.

Members of both major parties at the same time assailed another species of "defense broker," the operative who carries subcontracts from big munitions companies to the little side-street machine shop with 100 per cent profits to himself.

Two House committees, meanwhile, initiated moves in the direction of reduction of defense costs and further revelations of the activities of contract solicitors.

A member of the Naval Affairs Committee emerged from an executive meeting with the prediction that the committee shortly will report legislation placing a definite limit on defense contract profits.

A member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, which has begun a preliminary study of the reports of "influence" activities, said that before the inquiry is completed an examination will be made of the affairs of the Empire Ordnance Co.

Former Representative Charles West, of Ohio, has filed suit against Empire Ordnance, for $687,000 allegedly due him on a 1 per cent war contract commission. Thomas Corcoran, former lieutenant of President Roosevelt, is known to have contacted at least one Federal agency in behalf of Frank Cohen, an official of the concern.

Naval Group Gets Report

The Naval Committee yesterday examined behind closed doors its long-awaited report on defense profits. The report is known to analyze in great detail the profits of many Navy contracts and to contain startling facts about some of their earnings.

A suggestion of the nature of the report to be made public soon was given by the committee chairman, Representative Vinson (Democrat), of Georgia, when he declared last October that one contractor stood to make 247 per cent profit, while others, since the start of the inquiry, had undertaken to "renegotiate" contracts at lower figures.

Vinson at that time introduced a bill limiting defense profits to 7 per cent, but the measure was referred to the Ways and Means Committee which has since demonstrated a disinclination to approve this type of legislation.

Vinson, however, hopes to short-circuit the Ways and Means Committee by reporting a bill limiting naval profits and then obtaining from the Rules Committee a rule sufficiently broad to permit inclusion of all arms contracts.

Representative Faddis (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, chairman of a special Military Affairs Investigating Committee, promised the House that this body's probe of defense brokers will be pressed to the limit.

"Proper steps will be taken," Faddis declared, to enable the Government to recapture large sums if the Remington Arms Co. or other defense contractors are found to be conniving in the practice of "jacking up" prices on contracts.

In two days of public hearings this week the Faddis committee revealed that Leon K. Shanack, of New York, realized profits that, in at least one instance, were more than 100 per cent on Remington purchase orders for ammunition dies produced at the Greenwich Machine & Tool Co., of New York.

The committee recessed hearings following the disclosure, and investigators were sent into industrial centers of the East for evidence to bolster the case against defense brokers. Observers assumed an examination will be made at Remington Arms which operates a large plant at Bridgeport, Conn., and manages big ordnance plants for the War Department.

Representative Gehrmann (Progressive), of Wisconsin, author of a resolution calling for investigation of defense lobbyists by a special House committee, declared these solicitors of contracts to be "impostors of the worst sort."

Contending that officials conducting the defense program are for the most part impervious to "influence," he said lobbyists "are being paid salaries and fees amounting to a king's ransom" for a service that is neither necessary nor effective.

Gehrmann accused the brokers of "extorting money under false pretenses," of "peddling pap about being the fair-haired fixers" and branded them as "mere confidence men working under the guise of trained business agents."

"If we cannot exterminate them from the scene, at least require registration and some kind of regulations," he pleaded.

Joining the outcry, Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, warned of a "day of wrath." He declared:

"Let there be a vigorous use of the broom on defense brokers and favoritism. The growing belief that influence is required to obtain defense contracts is an expeditious way of destroying faith in the integrity of that Government which millions of boys receiving $21 per month are expected to defend."

Sudden illness of Edmund M. Toland, Naval Affairs Committee counsel, was reported yesterday by Chairman Vinson. Vinson said the report on defense profits would be held up pending Toland's recovery.

Rail Settlement Terms Ratified

Chicago, Dec. 5 (AP).—General chairmen of the "Big Five" railway operating brotherhoods tonight ratified the proposed terms for settlement of their wage demands, thus removing the last threat of a strike on the Nation's railroads. The strike had been set to begin at 6 a. m. Sunday.

Meantime, representatives of the 14 nonoperating brotherhoods conferred with a carriers' conference committee, but Bert M. Jewell, president of the A. F. of L.'s railway employes department, said only that negotiations probably would continue for several days. The nonoperating groups, while refusing to accept all previous settlement terms, did not issue a strike call.

Railroad traffic executives today ended a conference on proposals to seek increased freight rates and higher passenger fares to offset payroll increases estimated at $300,000,000 a year. The conferees withheld their conclusions pending the presentation of their recommendations to J. J. Pelley, president of the Association of American Railroads, in Washington.

Labor Bill Hits Snarl in Senate

on the House measure he may route his own bill, with some changes in language, through the Judiciary Committee.

President Roosevelt had no comment to make on the sweeping legislation approved by the House, at his press conference yesterday. Indications were that he was leaving the maze of measures for his Senate leaders to untangle, without taking a direct hand.

Senator Thomas said he will put the question of procedure to his Senate committee Monday and would make no forecasts. But several influential members of the group were known to favor calling in representatives of both major organizations for the first direct testimony yet taken on the Smith bill. One said the ground could be covered in two days and a bill reported to the Senate by Thursday.

Byrd's letter to Thomas said it was obvious that the Smith measure, passed almost 2 to 1 by the House, "is in recognition of an almost overwhelming demand on the part of the people of America that the Congress of the United States take immediate, effective, and constructive action to curb strikes in defense industries, which have done so much to sabotage the defense program of our country."

Discussing parliamentary alternatives, Byrd said consideration of the Smith bill presents "the only opportunity for completed legislative action on the part of Congress before the Christmas holidays."

With the House bill as a base, he explained, it would go back to the House in the event of Senate amendments only for the purpose of conference. But delay would result if another bill was passed by the Senate, as "it would go to the House as an original measure, necessitating committee consideration and House action, and then, if amended, it would come back to the Senate for conference."

Senate Minority Leader McNary, who conferred briefly with Senator Connally and others during the day, told reporters he opposed Senate action on either the Connally or Ball bills until the Labor Committee can hold hearings "fair to all sides" on the House bill.

"All I'm interested in is decent legislation," said McNary. "Labor representatives have not been heard on the Smith bill."

Connally, whose plant-seizure bill was reported by the Senate Judiciary Committee before the House acted, told reporters he still believes his proposals for the Government to take over defense plants threatened with labor stoppage, and freeze labor relations except wages therein, was a more effective remedy than the House bill. But for expedition, Connally also wants to use the House bill as the base for his own, which probably will be offered as an amendment.

U. S. Tries to Trace Mail Theft Of 1852; Bags Just Found

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Dec. 5.—Postal authorities carried on today what seemed to be the almost hopeless task of unraveling the mystery of an 89-year-old mail robbery while historians and stamp collectors eagerly awaited a chance to examine the contents of three bags whose discovery revealed the theft.

Postal inspectors were busy matching envelopes with letters which fell out of them when Mr. and Mrs. James Heugh, young Philadelphia artists, discovered the mail of November 1 and 2, 1852, while renovating an old house in mid-city Philadelphia.

Most of the correspondence, however, was folded without envelopes and originally had been sealed with wax. All the seals were broken.

Officials said families of the addresses would be traced, if possible. Efforts also are being made to trace the ownership of the house, which is believed to have stood on South Twelfth Street for about 130 years.

Eventually all of the 100 pieces of mail, including newspapers, insurance policies and drafts which had been contained in three canvas pouches, will be sent to Washington.

From Postmaster Frank C. Walker came an order that "the United States mail as such is inviolate and responsibility of the Postoffice Department to protect the sanctity of the papers, prevents giving out information, or permitting unauthorized persons to examine it."

The Heughs, meanwhile, entered a claim for any of the mail and stamps which might be returnable to them. One stamp collector said catalogs listed a one-cent blue stamp current in those years at $2000, and other issues from $8 to $2500. An old catalog in one postoffice showed only a 12-cent value for cancelled stamps for the issues of 1851 to 1856.

Postoffice Will Try To Deliver the Mail

The Postoffice Department here said yesterday it is awaiting a report on the long-lost mailbags and that, in the postal tradition, every effort will be made to deliver the mail.

But, considering the lapse of years since 1852, the Department wasn't too hopeful.

Ship Turbines Delay Laid to Allis-Chalmers

By Alfred Friendly
Post Staff Writer

The Allis-Chalmers strike in Milwaukee, settled and presumably forgotten eight months ago, came to life again yeserday with reports of from one to four months' delay in the delivery of basic equipment for 11 Maritime Commission ships.

Inquiry at the commission disclosed that contractors have filed claims asserting delays of 30 to 135 days in the delivery of main turbines and turbo-generators which had been ordered from the labor-troubled concern.

It was believed that similar, or possibly even more serious, delays had been encountered in the construction of vessels for the Navy, inasmuch as the Allis-Chalmers Co. had even larger contracts for naval ships than for merchant craft.

The Maritime Commission indicated that it had not yet examined the claims for delays and that the figures were merely those presented by the contractors. Further, it was said that the delay in delivering the machinery might not be reflected in equally long delays in delivering the finishing vessels, inasmuch as some work could be continued even if the turbines were not ready at the scheduled time.

However, in many cases, work beyond a certain point is impossible owing to the large size of the propulsion units, which must be lowered before the decks are in place, and to the necessity for completing wiring before the ship is finished.

The vessels dependent for turbines and turbo-generators on the Allis-Chalmers Co., and the reported delays in delivery of the equipment are:

The training ship American Sailor, three-four months; Army transports, Frederick Funston, four and one-half months, and James O'Hara, four months; and the following cargo ships: James McKay, three months; Stella Lykes, three months; Examiner, three-three and one-half months, and four C3 ships, delayed from one month to three months.

Aircraft Strike Threat To Be Arbitrated

The threatened strike of 13,000 workers employed by the Bell Aircraft Corporation, makers of fighting aircraft under the national defense program, was submitted to arbitration last night.

Secretary Perkins named Thomas Murray, of New York, former receiver for the Interborough Rapid Transit Corporation, as public representative on the arbitration board. The others are expected to be named by the company and the workers' representatives today.

Dispute Settled

Cleveland, Dec. 5 (AP).—A strike at the Aluminum Co. of America's Cleveland foundries was settled tonight at a meeting of company and C. I. O. representatives, and work was reported resumed immediately. The strike, called by the Die Casting Workers Union, lasted 24 hours.

The company, which has 60 million dollars worth of defense orders, employs 6000, of whom 400 answered the ingot strike call.

Train Rejects For Arms Jobs, Battley Urges

The chief of the War Department's labor division warned yesterday that men rejected by the Army because of physical defects must be trained for defense industrial jobs.

The officer, Lieut. Col. Joseph F. Battley, told a conference of Army and Navy officers and OPM labor officials gathered here to discuss labor supply problems that there is "virtually no immediately available reserve of workers left in most of the essential defense occupations."

Battley added that employers and training courses have neglected those individuals over draft age, those physically disqualified for Army service, and women. The huge training programs, he added, must be "supervised with a view to training men for defense employment who are not liable for military service because of physical defects and age."

"In the event of a shooting war," Battley declared, "with a vastly expanded production program and with depletion of our labor resources by the armed forces, our great problem will be to get the necessary workers for war industries."

Later, Battley implied, the situation may be reversed, and as industrial production levels off and military manpower needs multiply, many workers now deferred from Army service by reason of their essential national defense jobs will be reexamined and their draft deferments canceled.

Rail Mediators Had to Yield To Strike Threat, They Say

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Despite the conviction that the original recommendations for railroad wage increases were as high as justified by the facts, President Roosevelt's emergency board reported yesterday that, acting in the role of mediator at Mr. Roosevelt's request, its membership had bowed to expediency to devise the compromise by which a Nation-wide railroad strike has been averted.

The board's conclusions were set forth in a supplemental report to the President made public at the White House. As in the case of its original report, the board discussed, at considerable length, the economic implications of boosting wages in the present spiral of increased cost of living, and acknowledged that in this case the anticipated wage increases constituted a dangerous factor in itself.

The board, composed of college professors and lawyers without representation from either management or labor, has functioned under the Railway Labor Act. Its compromise, already accepted by management and assured of acceptance by labor, forestalled a strike scheduled to begin on Sunday.

In its supplementary report the board disclosed that counsel for the employes had failed to present any new arguments during the second hearings on the dispute, but had emphasized dissatisfaction of labor with the original recommendations and had "threatened to enforce their demands by striking."

Significant of the power of the railroad unions and their threat to tie up the transportation facilities, however, was the following assertion by the board:

"Public officers . . . when called upon by parties to help them settle a controversy, by the process of mediation, cannot ignore the acceptability of any proposed settlement to the particular party which has the greatest economic power to enforce its demands in a labor dispute."

Rejecting the contention of labor that the recommended 7½ per cent increase was insufficient, the board reported as follows to the President:

"During normal times there is every justification for labor to seek not only to maintain but to improve its standard of living, but if the defense program undertaken in this period of national emergency is to meet with success, workers and employers alike must be prepared to make sacrifices. Unless this hard fact is clearly recognized our country faces disaster.

"The board shares the apprehension of the employes that the cost of living may rise swiftly during the coming year. Yet the board believes that it is not sound policy to grant wage increases in anticipation of a continued rise in prices. Such a policy can only aggravate the very difficulty that it aims to overcome. The difficulty can best be dealt with by the adoption of a comprehensive plan in regard to wages, profits and the prices of both agricultural and industrial commodities."

C.I.O. Return To Mediation 'In Suspense'

Discounting expectations for an immediate return of C. I. O. representatives to the National Defense Mediation Board, President Roosevelt indicated to his press conference yesterday that the subject was still in suspense.

Mr. Roosevelt had asked Phillip Murray, C. I. O. president, and the other officers who resigned from the board in protest against its decision in the "captive" coal mines case, to withdraw their resignations.

A visit of Murray to the White House Thursday aroused speculation about the union leader's willingness to return. The Chief Executive told reporters, however, that he thought the subject was in suspense at the present time.

The question will be discussed today at a meeting of Murray with the C. I. O. vice presidents, it was learned. No permanent decision is expected, it was indicated, in view of the "troubled" legislative situation.

C. I. O. officers believe, it was reported, in view of the pendancy in the Senate of the Smith bill, providing drastic restrictions on strikes and union organizational activity, that conferences before the Mediation Board would be fruitless.

Eventual return of the C. I. O. to the mediation agency, it is believed, is contingent on guarantees that the board will not foreclose the award of any union or closed shop and that in all cases involving a C. I. O. dispute, the A. F. of L. representatives will not participate, and vice versa.

Through error, the ages on King George IV Scotch and Macleod's Isle Of Skye Scotch were incorrectly given in our advertisement appearing in The Washington Post Gift Section, December 4, 1941. We regret the incident.

This may not be a year in which to be demanding, but if we know women, and we think we do, they will still be wanting luxurious little pretties to make Christmas, and themselves, beautiful. According to Good Housekeeping editors, who should know feminine sentiment, that is the way women feel about gift-giving this year, and we are inclined to agree... Before tackling your gift list, read the full details in the Christmas issue of Good Housekeeping Magazine. Then trot down here and see how we can help you shed loveliness about you. From cellar to roof, we're overflowing with things to pay tribute to feminine charm. Because we happened to see the wink that went with that modest statement, "I Don't Want Much...But."

PUBLIC IS INVITED

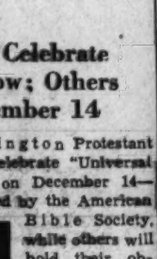
Some to Celebrate Tomorrow; Others On December 14

Many Washington Protestant churches will celebrate "Universal Bible Sunday" on December 14—the date proposed by the American Bible Society, while others will hold their observances tomorrow. Several Bible organizations have arranged special weekday programs commemorating "Universal Bible Sunday" — among them the D. C. Organized Bible Class Association, which will turn over its monthly meeting Monday at 8 p. m. at Epworth Methodist Church, Thirteenth Street and North Carolina Avenue Northeast, to the event. Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, pastor of Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, will speak on "The Bible for Today."

DR. FENDRICH

The Nation-wide celebration of "Universal Bible Sunday" has been indorsed by President Roosevelt and Governors of States and is designed to remind Americans "of their rich heritage in the world's greatest book and their responsibility in this dark hour to see that it is kept circulating in the world as a bulwark of democracy in every land," it was announced.

According to Dr. W. L. Darby, president of the Washington City Bible Society, local representative of the American Bible Society and former executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches, many churches generally set aside a portion of their regular offerings for Bible work, while others are expected to take up a special offering during the observance.



DR. DARBY

The American Bible Society's $165,000 goal for Bible work during the coming year will be budgeted as follows:

Scriptures for war prisoners and refugees, $20,000; Scriptures for French churches, $10,000; aid to the British and Foreign Bible Society in blockaded areas, $90,000; Netherlands Indies work, $15,000; maintenance of publication work by the Bible Society of France, $5000, and pocket Testaments for the American armed forces, $25,000.

Brookland Methodist Church, Fourteenth and Lawrence Streets Northeast, will observe "Universal Bible Sunday" at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. tomorrow. The L. F. O. Churches Wait Methodist Founding Fete

Four Georgetown Methodist Churches tomorrow and during the coming week will join in services commemorating the founding of Methodism in that community 149 years ago.

MR. DAVIS

The programs will be centered at Dumbarton Avenue Methodist Church, Dumbarton Avenue near Thirty-first Street. Other participating congregations will be Aldersgate, Congress Street and Mount Tabor Methodist Churches.

The Rev. Dr. C. E. Forelines, president of Westminster Theological Seminary, Western Maryland College, will preach tomorrow at 11 a. m., and the Rev. Lloyd C. Davis, Dumbarton pastor, will preside. The Dumbarton Church Choir will sing.

The services tomorrow at 8 p. m. will be addressed by the Rev. Floyd Morrison, pastor of Aldersgate Church, and the music will be furnished by that church's choir. Dr. John R. Edwards, superintendent of the West Washington Methodist District, will speak Monday at 8 p. m., when corporate communion will be observed for the four congregations.

Fraternal Night will be celebrated Tuesday at 8 p. m.; Laymen's Night, Wednesday, 8 p. m.; Former Pastors' Night, Thursday, 8 p. m., and Youth Night, Friday, 8 p. m. The closing services will be on December 14.

Church to Mark Fifth Anniversary Of Pastorate

The fifth anniversary of the pastorate of Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden will be observed at the First Baptist Church tomorrow. Although the church is 140 years old, the attendance, membership and offerings have more than doubled within this five-year period. The building has undergone extensive improvements and considerable new property has also been purchased during this short time.

DR. PRUDEN

At both morning services Dr. Pruden will use as his topic, "Another Shortage Revealed." At the 9:45 service the youth choir will sing "Lo, How a Rose E'er Blooming," by Praetoriees, and at the 11 o'clock service the senior choir will sing "Hark Now, O Shepherds," by Luvaas. Ruth Reumann Hall will sing "The Lord's Prayer," by Malotte, at both services. This is an annual feature of the anniversary services.

At 8 p. m. the guest preacher will be Dr. J. Hillman Hollister, minister of the Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church, and the chancel choir will sing "Gloria in Excelsis," from Mozart's Twelfth Mass.

'Give Yourself Away'

The Rev. H. Gordon Burroughs will have as his subject tomorrow evening at the Hotel Continental "Give Yourself Away." Mrs. Virginia Harpham, violinist, will be the soloist. On Wednesday there will be a lecture by the minister, followed by a message service.

Universalists Will Honor John Murray

The 200th anniversary of the birth of John Murray, founder of the Universalist movement, will be commemorated tomorrow with special services in churches of that faith throughout the world. Murray, a native of England, came to this country and with Thomas Potter began the Universalist movement on September 30, 1770.

At 10 o'clock, the Rev. Seth R. Brooks, minister of the Universalist National Memorial Church, will address the adult class on "Followers of John Murray" and at 11 o'clock he will conduct the services of worship and preach upon "A New Church Consciousness." At 7 o'clock the Young People's Christian Union will meet for fellowship and at 7:30 there will be a devotional service and a program on "The Life of John Murray."

On Wednesday, Universalists throughout the United States and Canada will come together at dinners to commemorate the anniversary. Local Universalists will gather at the Aris Club at 7 p. m. Mrs. William H. McGlauflin, wife of the late Dr. William H. McGlauflin, former general superintendent of the Universalist Church, is general chairman. Dr. Brooks will preside and the speakers will be Mrs. Elon G. Salisbury, descendent of a long line of distinguished Universalist educators; Mrs. Seth R. Brooks, national president of the Association of Universalist Women; Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, and Henry C. Morris, of Chicago and Washington prominent Universalist laymen.

'Volunteer Day' Will Be Observed

"Volunteer Day" will be observed tomorrow at the Ninth Street Christian Church, where members of the church will be given an opportunity to make a personal pledge to the support of the budget of the church. Each member will place his pledge on the communion table at the front of the church at the close of a fitting service of self-dedication.

The following weeks of the month of December will be filled with preparations on the special days that always precede Christmas. On Wednesday, December 10, the Woman's Council will sponsor their annual Turkey Dinner in the church basement. They will begin serving at 5:00 and close at 7:00.

Special Services Set At D. C. Cathedral

An active schedule of services, in addition to the regular ones at Washington Cathedral, is announced for the coming week, to include the beginning of the Cathedral's many special Christmas activities.

The annual rededication service of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew will be held tomorrow at 8 p. m. in the Bethlehem Chapel. The Rev. Nathaniel C. Acton, rector of St. Andrew's Church, College Park, Md., and Canon W. Curtis Draper, jr., of the Cathedral, will officiate at the service.

Canada Extends Wage Stabilization To All Industries

Ottawa, Dec. 5 (AP)—Extension of the Canadian government's wage stabilization order to cover all industrial employes was announced tonight by Labor Minister Norman McLarty.

Employers in building and industries with less than 10 employes and other employers with less than 50 employes, exempted from provisions of the original order, are now covered.

The order now affects every class of employe except dominion, provincial and municipal employes, employes in agriculture, horticulture, fishing, hunting, trapping, and domestic service, and employes of certain nonprofit institutions.

The wage stabilization program provides for payment of cost-of-living bonuses by all employers and "freezing" of basic wage rates with the intention of keeping workers' income in line with the cost of living.

A further amendment to the original order-in-council provides that no employer may decrease the basic wage rates paid by him on November 15 without official permission.

"Any such decreases already adopted since the passing of the order are to be canceled," the statement said.

Examiner Urges Board Deny Two New Air Routes

An examiner recommended to the Civil Aeronautics Board yesterday that it deny applications of two airlines for a new route between St. Louis, Mo., and Washington, and an application by one of the carriers for a new route between St. Louis and Dayton, Ohio.

Eastern Airlines, Inc., and Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., both applied for a route between St. Louis and Washington.

Another application by TWA was for a route between St. Louis and Dayton via Evansville, Louisville, Frankfort-Lexington and Cincinnati.

The examiner, J. Francis Reilly said there was "a paucity of evidence" in the record with respect to TWA's proposed St. Louis-Dayton route, adding that the record would "not permit a finding that presently authorized facilities cannot adequately meet the need for such service."

With respect to the St. Louis-Washington proposals the examiner said it was apparent that the potential air traffic was relatively small between the points between which the proposed routes would afford substantial savings in mileage.

Canadian Rockies Burton Holmes' Lecture Subject

The beauty of the Canadian Rockies was pictured to members of the National Geographic Society at Constitution Hall last night in an illustrated lecture by Burton Holmes, veteran world traveler.

Holmes showed natural color motion pictures of the spruce, pine and balsam forests of Jasper National Park; of famous Lake Louise and the Banff resort, and of the Waterton-Glacier International Peace Park.

A beauty contest with elderly Indians in full regalia as the judges was a highlight of the Banff film. Indian games and dances also were shown, as were fiercely carved totem poles in Thunderbird Park at Vancouver.

The pictures also included wild life scenes of bears and moose, as well as a series of photographs of bright flowers carpeting the valleys between snow-capped mountains.

Thailand Goes On War Footing

Shanghai (Saturday), Dec. 6 (U.P.)—A Bangkok dispatch of the Domei (Japanese) News Agency said today that the Thailand Assembly had approved emergency measures placing Thailand on a war footing.

Bills passed were said to include measures for labor mobilization, antiespionage and food storage.

A government spokesman in a broadcast to the nation last night announced the measures the populace must take in event of war.

Bishop Hughes Will Be 75 Tomorrow

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, retired Methodist resident prelate, will celebrate his seventy-fifth birthday tomorrow by preaching at 11 a. m. at Foundry Methodist Church—his home church—at the request of Dr. Frederick Brown Harris, pastor, and lay leaders of the congregation.

Bishop Hughes

Since his retirement from the active work of the episcopacy, when Bishop Adna Wright Leonard succeeded him as the resident bishop of the Washington area, Bishop Hughes has made his home in Washington with his daughter, Mrs. Walter S. Harban.

Bishop Hughes for many years has been recognized as one of the outstanding leaders of Protestantism. For many years he labored for the unification of the three branches of Methodism. He made the address at the famous unifying conference of Methodism at Kansas City in 1939, declaring the final union of the followers of John Wesley. The united church now has between eight and nine million members.

City Hall, School Topple in Quake Near Canal Zone

Panama, Dec. 5 (AP)—Two strong earth shocks toppled the municipal building and a school today at Santiago, midway between Panama City and David, and panic spread temporarily among the population.

There were four strong shocks at David, Panama's third city 60 miles from the border of Costa Rica where damage also was reported.

The most damage appeared to have been in the vicinity of David, a town of about 15,000 population.

Santiago, much smaller, is about 125 miles west of the Panama Canal at Balboa.

Costa Rica Shaken

San Jose, Costa Rica, Dec. 5 (AP).—An earthquake violently shook the central plateau region of Costa Rica and the southern area bordering Panama today, causing considerable property damage and some injuries.

The tremor, felt throughout virtually all of Costa Rica, destroyed ten houses at Santo Domingo Heredia, in the coffee country 10 miles north of San Jose. Early reports told of property damage also in Guadalupe, Corralillo Cartago and Puerta Jiminez.

Today's quake followed a series of slight tremors the past several days.

Ship Welders Need Only One Union Card on Coast Now

Los Angeles, Dec. 5 (AP).—A. F. L. unions and Los Angeles shipbuilders have agreed upon a policy under which "it will not be necessary for any welder to carry more than one card in order to work wherever his services are required within a yard."

This was announced today by Lieut. Commander George M. Keller, under temporary loan to the Office of Production Management, at the close of four days of discussions on the protest of unionized independent welders against A. F. L. control.

Welders complained that in instances they had been forced to carry cards in several unions.

Commander Keller said he felt the new program "will completely eliminate any of the causes of complaint that welders employed in Pacific Coast shipyards have had."

Carole Bruce's 'Gift' Proves to Be Student Admirer

Atlanta, Dec. 5 (AP).—Film actress Carole Bruce got her first Christmas present and a Georgia Tech junior figured he got as much as he put into it.

Johnny Rogers, who said he had been a Bruce admirer for some time, hid himself in a large box wrapped in Christmas paper and the fancy trimmings.

Two friends wheeled Johnny backstage while Miss Bruce filled a personal appearance engagement here.

"Who . . . who are you?" asked the startled actress on opening the package.

"I'm Johnny!" he stammered.

"Oh, Johnny!" said Miss Bruce, who squared things with a kiss and an autographed picture.

Two Die in Crash Of Naval Plane

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 5 (AP).—A crash of a Navy airplane near the reservoir target in Princess Anne County today resulted in the death of two men who were engaged in the dive bombing practices in the James Rive Bridge vicinity.

The dead were Second Lieut. The dead were Second Lieut. Stanley P. Lienke, U. S. M. C. Reserve, 21, a passenger. Cause of the accident was not determined. Lienke's home was in Windom, Minn. Latorre, seaman second class, was from Memphis, Tenn.

A. M. Aiken, Retired N. Y. Banker, Dies at 66

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Dec. 5 (U.P.)—Arthur M. Aiken, 66, who retired eight years ago as vice president and comptroller of the Chase National Bank of New York, died at a hospital here today.

Aiken, whose home was at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y., had been in the banking business for 46 years, until his retirement in 1933.

Survivors include the widow and a daughter, Mrs. Winston Wilson, Larchmont, N. Y. Funeral services will be held here tomorrow.

Club Honors Memory Of Mozart

By Ray C. B. Brown

Friday Morning Music Club commemorates the sesquicentennial of Mozart's death. Artists: Glenn Carow, pianist; Maxwell Galloway, Elizabeth Everett and Genevieve Hughes, vocalists; Lois Abernethy, accompanist.

At the regular concert meeting in Barker Hall yesterday the Friday Morning Music Club held in remembrance for an hour the passing from this earth of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart early in the morning of December 5, 1791. As was befitting the commemoration of a gentle and joyous spirit, the program was not funereal but pleasurable in atmosphere, and the attendant sadness was only the regret that a genius was cut off in his thirty-fifth year. Had Mozart lived as long as Beethoven, Wagner or Verdi, there is no telling what wonders he would have accomplished, for in his short life he composed a quantity of music which we have not yet exhausted in performance. With his masterpieces we are all acquainted, but there are many of his works still unheard in our day.

BROWN

Yesterday's tribute to the young master of enchanting melodies was begun by Glenn Carow, who played with tenderness and clarity of phrasing the exquisitely nostalgic Rondo in D minor, the Rondo alla Turca from the Sonata in A major, and the third movement from the F major Sonata.

The remainder of the program consisted of an abbreviated concert version in costume of "Bastien and Bastienne," the miniature comic opera written in Vienna by the 12-year-old Wolfgang and performed in the house of Dr. Anton Mesmer, whose name is preserved in the word mesmerism. The singers were Maxwell Galloway, Elizabeth Everett and Genevieve Hughes; the accompanying pianist was Lois Abernethy and Anne Yago McGuffey was the modestly invisible director.

The libretto for this delightful little farce of pastoral character was a parody, translated from French into German, of Rousseau's opera, "Le Devin de Village." One can but marvel at the precocity of the boy who caught so readily the note of mockery and composed the light and ingratiating arias that express the quarrel and reconciliation of lovers, and the pretensions of the self-styled magician, Dr. Fels. We can speculate endlessly over the fact that the first four notes of the overture are identical in rhythm and interval with the first theme of the "Eroica" symphony.

Business Unit $73,700 Shy In Chest Drive

Community Chest workers are urging the 1100 business establishments in the group solicitation unit here to make a final effort to raise the $73,700 which the unit needs to erase its shortage and achieve its quota by the final report meeting Monday.

The $678,000 Chest quota which business and industrial Washington has been asked to subscribe represents approximately one-third of the entire two-million-dollar goal supported by all units. Last Tuesday it was reported the group unit had reached a total of $604,226, or 89.11 per cent of its quota.

Only a few of the total number of business firms have reported 100 per cent employe participation and 100 per cent of the goal subscribed, it was stated. While most have reached the 90 per cent mark, it is the remaining 10 per cent which is of such vital importance, A. G. Neal, chairman of the unit said yesterday.

Seriously lagging among the business concerns are 100 firms who have made no report of any Chest donations today date, it was said, and another 150 where the response is far below the 90 per cent average. These two groups, totaling 250 business establishments, have about 7500 employes who have not so far made a Chest pledge, it was pointed out.

It is believed that some of these firms, because they employ a small number of persons, are inclined to underestimate the importance of their response. "Every contribution, no matter what its size, is important now," Neal said.

Those firms which have been reported with 100 per cent Chest quota subscribed are as follows:

Acacia Mutual Life Insurance Co., Associated Retail Credit Man, Community Chest Headquarters, Emily Shops, Henry Kaufman Advertising, Grosmer's, Brooks, Inc., Edgar Morris Sales, Mars Grill, J. E. Hanger Co., Y. W. C. A., George A. Simonds Co., Southern Oxygen Co., Forman, Inc., Republic Pictures Corporation, Palais Royal, Jelleff's, Inc., Bank of Commerce and Savings, Capitol Park Hotel, Sidwell Friends School, Security Storage Co., Federal Storage Co., B. Rich and Sons, James A. Councilor & Co., Southern Dairies, Inc., United States Fidelity & Guaranty Co. and Boss and Phelps.

Defendant Insane, Appeals Court Refuses Review

Laying down a new policy on first-degree murder cases, the United States Court of Appeals yesterday declared that it will not hear appeals on first-degree decisions while a defendant is declared to be insane.

The announcement of policy came when attorneys sought to argue an appeal in behalf of Clarence Blocker, Negro truck driver convicted of the slaying of U. S. Park Policeman Ivan W. Thompson in June of last year.

The court ruled that the case be held in District Court pending further developments in Blocker's mental condition.

Blocker was judged insane by Government psychiatrists about a year ago. This opinion was confirmed later by a District Court jury, thus postponing his execution, and he has been confined at St. Elizabeths Hospital.

Existing Recreation Facilities Not Utilized, Wolter Says

Physical equipment for recreation in the District is "not nearly being utilized," Hugo Wolter, director of the Consumer and Welfare Committee of the District Defense Council, yesterday told volunteers interested in helping Washington solve its welfare problems.

Church parish houses, community centers, settlements and schools could be used much more extensively than they are, he declared at the U. S. Chamber of Commerce Building, 1615 H Street Northwest, where civilian defense classes are being sponsored by the Council of Social Agencies.

Volunteers could help make the recreation program big enough to absorb the facilities, even while waiting for more adequate recreation centers and playgrounds to be developed, he declared.

The importance of recreation was recognized by Hitler and brought to a high peak by him in development of the joy-through-strength program, Wolter said.

Mrs. Mildred Percy, director of the department of guidance and placement in the District public schools, outlined to the class work being done in Washington to bring to school children a realization of their potentialities.

The program, she said, attempts to bridge the gap between the old-line idea that all children are of equal ability and talent and the "hard fact of reality that all are different."

'Appointment for Love' Is a Nice One to Keep

Charles Boyer and Margaret Sullavan Give Polish and Punch to New Comedy at Earle; Dave Apollon Headlines Ace Stage Revue

"APPOINTMENT FOR LOVE." Universal picturization of an original story, "Heartbeat," by Ladislaus Bus-Fekete, adapted to the screen by Bruce Manning and Felix Jackson, costarring Charles Boyer and Margaret Sullavan, with Rita Johnson, Eugene Pallette, Ruth Terry, Reginald Denny, Cecil Kellaway, J. M. Kerrigan, Roman Bohnen, Gus Schilling, Virginia Brissac and Mary Gordon. Directed by William A. Seiter. At the Earle Theater.

TO ALL IN QUEST of a model of what all comedies of marital frustration might well be, Universal's production of "Appointment for Love," now on the screen at the Earle Theater, is enthusiastically recommended.

Here is the familiar story of the successful young professional man, a playwright, who marries an attractive and equally successful young woman doctor and encounters the usual impediments to the consummation of his marriage. Those impediments, by the way, are the only respect in which "Appointment for Love" is usual. Its incidents and situations are fresh, sprightly and highly diverting; its dialogue is crisp, literate and natural and, above all, it has the good taste to rely for its fun upon humor that is never indelicate and cleves subtleties that frequently imply domestic discouragement but never offend. It is superlatively well played by a cast of perfect selection and produced gorgeously but not garishly.

The development of the connubial complexities is contrived in such manner as to provide great variety of scene—hospital, swank restaurants, theater, commodious apartments, gay parties, a rustic lodge and the like—without distortion of an engagingly human problem or its credibility.

Minus the skiing, the present antic is a rationalized and refined close cousin of the recent "You Belong to Me," in which Henry Fonda and Barbara Stanwyck encountered identical difficulties which they attacked with far less naturalness and finesse than Charles Boyer and Margaret Sullavan so skillfully bring to their conquest of duplicate assignments. This reference is made for purposes of quick classification and not invidious comparison. The two pictures are so dissimilar in treatment as to belong virtually to different milieus.

The chief point of conflict between Andre Cassil and Dr. Jane Alexander reposes in her insistence that they occupy separate apartments, five floors apart in the same building, to safeguard "individuality" and avoid interruptions of each other's careers. When, after some dissatisfaction with this aloof arrangement, he spends a night in her comfortable 22-B, awaiting her return, and she spends the same hours in his 17-A, anxiously listening for the sound of his key, a considerable to-do is precipitated, especially when the impulsive dramatist seeks an explanation over the microphone of a national broadcast in which Dr. Alexander is participating as a medical expert. The events leading up to and away from this climactic episode are comparably adroit and delightful.

Stars and Cast at Their Best

In the role of Cassil, Charles Boyer has one of those thoroughly congenial assignments in which he is enabled to display the full range of the "charm" for which he is so embarrassingly famous and, as his bride, Margaret Sullavan has opportunities that perfectly match her fine command of all the feminine moods. The plot enlists the services of both a male and female "menace." As played by Rita Johnson, the star in Mr. Cassil's plays, and Reginald Denny, the explorer in Dr. Alexander's life, just back from Brazil, they add immeasurably to both the romantic and comic aspects of the play. Eugene Pallette, as the hefty and acidly humorous producer, and Cecil Kellaway, the perceptive butler, contribute generously to the laughter and Gus Schilling finds himself an elevator boy of more than ordinary value to the most enlivening periods of the action. In lesser characters Ruth Terry, J. M. Kerrigan and Mary Gordon preserve the high level of excellence on which the entire charade is executed. William A. Seiter's direction extracts full value from every line of the splendid script supplied by Bruce Manning, who also produced, and Felix Jackson.

The new stage bill concocted for the week by the resourceful Harry Anger is up to the superior quality of the picture. With Dave Apollon, recently of Ed Wynn's "Boys and Girls Together," to do the mastering of ceremonies and his virtuosoing on the mandolin, the thing moves gayly and swiftly. Apollon is, to all intents and purposes, a complete revue in himself, but doesn't have to be on this occasion. The Antaleks, four girls and two men, open proceedings with an exhibition of their amazing skill as equilibrists; Ben Yost's New Yorkers, a mixed double quartet, sing their way into enthusiastic favor and Danny Drayson proves on his first visit to town that he is the present day's Will Mahoney as a comic tap dancer. In the meantime, the Roxyettes are in and out in a succession of their no plus ultra routines, with Joan Ritter doing the "Hut-Sutting" and Jo Lombardi's Orchestra spouting its tunes from the stage. A Paramount Popular Science release and the newsreel, both bearing down on the Army Tank Corps, complete a program that is 22 karats fine.

Well, Here's Love in Your Eye!

Too often we glorify others and forget our own. But Dick English, who's just written "Strictly Ding Dong," and Ted Stauffer, the best band leader of Europe, collaborated on "Daddy of the Down Beat," the story of Paul Whitem a n, with Paul playing himself, and Mervyn LeRoy wants to do it. It's a natural . . . Have you any idea how many young musicians Paul Whiteman has helped? He introduced Bing Crosby as one of the "Three Rhythm Boys," Gene Austin, Morton Downey, Connie Boswell, Helen Jepson, Benny Goodman, Jane Frohman, Hattie Pickens, Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey, Johnny Mercer, Johnny Green, Henry Busse, Eddie Duchin, Jack Teagarden, Hoagy Carmichael and Ferde Grofe—and the list goes on from there.

It's getting monotonous writing "Sam Goldwyn's done it again," but he certainly has, with "Ball of Fire." Sam always has believed, with Shakespeare, "the play's the thing" so, starting with an original story by Billy Wilder and Tom onroe, which had kicked around our town for two years, Sam put Wilder and Charles Brackett to work on it, and then rounded up the finest cast seen on the screen in many a day. The picture's a natural for Gary Cooper and Barbara Stanwyck. And the whole thing is wound up in a nice little Christmas package by Director Howard Hawks. What I'm trying to say in a few thousand words is that "Ball of Fire" is a wow from start to finish.

Incidentally, the original by Billy Wilder and Charlie Brackett, which Ginger Rogers will do at Paramount, will be directed by Billy Wilder as his first directorial job.

CASTING: Harry Carey, who hasn't played a villainous role in more than 20 years, was invited by Alfred Hitchcock to portray the saboteur in Hitchcock's new picture. "But Harry is so American," Mrs. Carey protested . . . "That's just what we want," the director told her. "All the saboteurs in this picture will be Americans. They're least suspected, and therefore most dangerous" . . . "No," Mrs. Carey decided, "Harry won't play the role. Because if moviegoers see Harry Carey as a saboteur, it would make everybody in America suspect every neighbor."

SLAP: A young lady, her mother, an Italian officer and a Nazi trooper were riding in the compartment of an Italian train which went through a tunnel. As soon as darkness enveloped the car, a kiss was heard—followed by a hard slap. When the train emerged into sunlight, the passengers' thoughts were these: (1) The Nazi—"These mad, romantic Latins. How dare he kiss that girl. How cowardly, to try it only in the dark." . . . (2) The young lady—"The nerve of him, trying to kiss my mother. I'm glad she was able to defend herself." . . . (3) The mother—"So they'd kiss my daughter, eh? Well, I raised her properly, and I'm glad she took proper action." . . . ROMANCE: Leon Henderson went to the Stork Club, where he met George Jessel. Jessel was lamenting the loss of six of his showgirls, who quit "High Kickers" when they eloped. "This disproves an accepted sociologic theory," Henderson told Jessel. "The books all tell us that in times of war, people's morals become loose. Six marriages in one show, these days, is a complete refutation of that theory."

LAMENT: George S. Kaufman and Moss Hart now are defendants in the usual plagiarism case. This time the case involves "The Man Who Came to Dinner." . . . Their lawyer, in presenting his witnesses, summoned Kaufman, Myra Streger, his casting director, and others. "I want to be a witness too," Hart insisted. "Whenever we have a hit, it's had enough when people say 'George is responsible for all of it.' Now that we're accused of plagiarism, it would be worse if I didn't get a chance to prove that I, at least, stole half."

Civic Theater Plays 'Troilus and Cressida'

By Richard L. Coe

It was a beautifully garbed corpse the Civic Theater exhumed last night on the stage of the Wardman Park Theater. Identification of the body revealed it to be one of the many offspring of William Shakespeare, Esq., specifically "Troilus and Cressida," variously described by the savants as a tragedy, a comedy and a farce. This shadowy personality had made it a stranger to a world which loves most of its brothers and sisters dearly, but, despite affectionate resuscitation efforts, the 340-year-old frame lay lifeless in its billowing garments.

It is with heavy but honest heart this witness reports last night's events which took place, by the way, before a large audience, dressed almost as effulgently as the players, benefitting Bundles for Britain. Pandarus himself, most lively of the evening's characters, stated the reviewer's thoughts precisely when, at the end of the play, he remarked:

"Why should our endeavor be so lov'd and the performance so loath'd?"

An Exalted Aim

For the Civic aimed admirably when it sought to revive one of the neglected works of the greatest dramatist. The play is thought not to have been performed here before, certainly not since the 1840s, date of its last playings in America. No end of thought and labor evidently has been poured into this effort. There are several fine actors in the company. The technical problems have been shrewdly surmounted. Individual details—lighting, costuming and scoring—have been neatly conceived. But remember the old chestnut about all work and no play?

"Troilus and Cressida" is the Elizabethan master's telling of the great Greek legend. Hector, Achilles, Priam and Ajax, Aeneas, Agamemnon, Cassandra and Helen, Paris, Ulysses, Patroclus and Andromache are its characters. Chaucer, too, told the story of the youngest son of Priam and the wanton niece of Pandarus.

Director Leon Askin has given it a highly stylized production, employing the technique, a necessity of Shakespeare's day, of a curtainless stage on which settings and scenes are indicated purely by the text. For this stage, Henry C. Pearson has apparently arbitrarily chosen the decor of the Restoration instead of the stark simplicity of the playwright's own Theater and Globe. Dorothy Croissant's costumes also follow the tradition of Shakespeare's day in that the actors all were elegantly dressed even if the stage was not, but she, too, seems to have followed an arbitrary bent, such as a pretty feminine knee peeking out from the furbelows of an extravagant costume.

All this style would try the most skilled of performers in seeming at ease and with a large company to cast this has been an insurmountable task. While three performers—Rudolf Justice Watson, Murray Sheehan and William Zuckert—come through this trial unscathed, most of the company acts as if it were at a very fancy fancy dress ball and being mighty careful not to seem as foolish as they look.

Male Trio Effective

The poetry of Shakespeare, however, is there and occasionally comes bobbing to the surface, particularly when Mr. Watson speaks it. Mr. Sheehan's Pandarus is witty and well-spoken and Mr. Zuckert at least looks the part of the volatile Ajax. The leading feminine players are Edith Simmons, as a very arch Cressida lacking, should one say, the amoral character of the role; Dorothy Faris as the embattled Helen with an American accent, and Ann Donaldson, a full-throated Cassandra, the Dorothy Thompson of the Trojan Wars.

One must quarrel with the distinctly smirking fashion in which the lustier scenes of the piece are handled. Shakespeare's characters and audiences were a red-blooded lot and liked their amorous scenes and situations vigorous and hearty. Puritanical leers and apologetic bawdiness would have gotten their celebrated "bird," if they had comprehended such morality.

One must say a word of praise for the organ music of Herbert Herzfeld, although the trumpeting seems overdone. Evelyn Davis did the choreography.

"Troilus and Cressida" will be repeated this evening at the Wardman Park, where it will resume its Wednesday-Saturday evening performances next week.

Fly on Player's Noodle Is a Mole

The little fly that wasn't there spoiled a scene on "A Date With the Falcon" set at RKO Radio.

Director Irving Reis had his camera all trained for a closeup of Alec Craig, well-known character actor, lying dead on a bed while George Sanders, the Falcon, bent over the body to pick up a bottle of sleeping powders.

The action started and as Sanders straightened up, the top of Craig's bald head showed. "Cut," yelled Reis. "There's a fly on Craig's head."

Craig came to life and brushed his hand across his bald pate. "That isn't a fly," he said. "That's a mole."

Time was taken out while Ben Libitzer, makeup man, covered the mole with makeup.

Before Working

Actress Jean Parker walks 2 miles each morning before reporting to the set to begin her day's work in "No Hands on the Clock." Jean and several other young actresses have formed a hiking club.

House Group Attacks City Traffic Tangle

The House District Committee yesterday attacked Washington's knotty traffic problem on three fronts as it approved, within half an hour, measures which, if enacted, would:

1. Require all new Federal buildings to provide parking space for at least 10 per cent of their employes.

2. Set up zoning regulations requiring all new structures to provide off-street parking facilities for their tenants.

3. Authorize the Commissioners and Public Utilities Commission to start a survey to determine the "feasibility" of a subway system for both vehicular and rail traffic.

Meanwhile, it was agreed at a joint conference of District and Public Buildings and Grounds Committee members that legislation should be enacted permitting the District to receive $2,500,000 on Lanham Act funds for construction of public works necessitated by the national emergency.

Chairman Randolph, of the District Committee, said he would bring the measure up for House action Monday. The sum would be employed to improve water, fire alarm and sewer facilities.

The resolution requiring a subway survey in the District, sponsored by Representatives D'Alesandro (Democrat), of Maryland, received the unanimous support of the committee after an amendment had been agreed upon permitting either the Public Utility Commission or the Commissioners to undertake it. No funds for the study were appropriated.

Another parking bill approved by the committee would prohibit parking on public or private property without the consent of the owners. Motorists have been parking over night in filling stations, private lots and school yards without permission, and the only present recourse of property owners is to laws against trespass, the committee was informed.

Two other bills also were approved by the committee. One would require charity organizations to obtain a license from the Commissioners and submit an annual report on their finances. The other would draw employes of the Board of Public Welfare into the Civil Service merit system.

Chairman Randolph promised the committee's aid to the Commissioners in their proposed survey of overcrowded conditions in local hospitals resulting from Washington's greatly increased population.

Representative Schulte (Democrat), of Indiana, told the committee: "The hospitals are so crowded that patients are quartered in the corridors and cubby holes. If an epidemic breaks out here, God help Washington."

The Commissioners, all of whom attended yesterday's meeting, said the survey of hospitals and hospital needs would be completed within two weeks.

"We'll give every attention to the needs of the hospitals," said Chairman Randolph. "Our aid will be guided by the results of the survey."

Meeting at the same time, on the other side of Capitol Hill, a Senate District subcommittee under the chairmanship of Senator Burton (Republican), of Ohio, heard the proposal that out-of-town buses be allowed to bring school children to Washington for sightseeing without being subject to license fees.

Joseph A. Kaufmann, attorney for the Gray Line, local sightseeing bus company, made the suggestion in the form of a proposed amendment to a subcommittee-proposed amendment which would charge an annual fee of $100 for all sightseeing buses operating in the District, plus a charge of $2 for every day of operation over 30 days.

Other Survivors Listed

Surviving, in addition to Mrs. Rotter, are three daughters, Mrs. James Green Page, of Norfolk, Va.; Mrs. Marshall Mullkin, of Winter Haven, Fla., and Mrs. Oliver Winston, of 2633 Fifteenth Street Northwest, Washington; one son, Sanford Louis Rotter, of 1918 Belmont Road Northwest, Washington, and one brother, Edward Grundy Rotter, of Wilmington, Del.

Sister Loretto, of Holy Cross Academy, 2935 Upton Street Northwest, suffered severe injuries when the taxi in which she was a passenger was in collision with an automobile at Independence Avenue and First Street Southwest. Sister Loretto was treated at Providence Hospital for possible broken ribs.

Doretta Colne, 55, of 438 Luray Place Northwest, was treated at Garfield Hospital for injuries received when struck by a car in the 3500 block Georgia Avenue Northwest. She was treated at Garfield Hospital for a possible broken leg and shock. Police said the car was driven by Walter H. Johnson, 25, of 49 H Street Southwest.

Six Hurt in Crash

Six Negroes were injured when their station wagon collided with a streetcar at Pennsylvania Avenue and Eighth Street Southeast. All were treated at Casualty Hospital for cuts and bruises. They were Virgil Dawkins, 31; Wilson Smith, 36; William Dawkins, 22; Lewis Dent, 31; Edward Dawkins, 28, and Robert Torney, 28, all of Lusby, Md. Police said the station wagon was driven by Aslandus Johnson Lusby, of Calvert County, Md.

Florence G. Plummer, 54, Negro, of 4340 Douglas Street Northeast, suffered leg injuries when struck by a skidding car in the 500 block New Jersey Avenue Northwest. Police said the car was driven by John R. Gould, of Kensington, Md.

Hezekia Worrell, 57, of 722 Seventh Street Southeast, was treated at Casualty Hospital for injury to his knee when struck by a car in the 500 block Eleventh Street Southeast. According to police, the car was driven by Earl W. Nagruder, 44, of Anacostia.

Kelly Pledges Detective Bureau Strengthening In Talk to Criminal Justice Association Chiefs

Strengthening of the Detective Bureau, in progress for nearly four months, will continue until "it is brought to the highest standard of efficiency," Maj. Edward J. Kelly, superintendent of police, said yesterday.

Addressing the board of directors of the Washington Criminal Justice Association, Maj. Kelly pledged the department's 100 per cent cooperation to the association and commended its objectives and achievements.

The directors, holding their regular quarterly meeting at the Willard Hotel, referred to the executive committee a proposal to conduct a comprehensive crime survey of the Capital. G. Howland Shaw, Assistant Secretary of State and a prominent leader in social work, recommended the study be undertaken.

Maj. Kelly predicted that establishment of the Washington Police Academy early next month will mark a long step toward improvement of the Metropolitan Police Department. The "school," he asserted, will draw upon the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the courts, district attorneys, office of the United States marshal, lawyers, press and out-of-town officials for lectures on all phases of law enforcement.

The directors approved a recommendation by Dr. James A. Nolan, managing director, to cooperate with the Washington Social Hygiene Society in a study of the relationship between prostitution and other legal offenses.

However, this investigation may be incorporated in the general crime survey proposed by Shaw. Similarly, the study might cover the question of providing legal counsel for indigent prisoners.

Action on the latter issue was strongly urged by Sefton Darr, former president of the District Bar Association and a director of the association.

Persons who can afford to pay a part of the counsel fee, as well as those wholly indigent, should be taken into consideration, suggested Walter T. Fisher, Chicago lawyer and member of the National Defense Mediation Board, who was a guest at the directors' meeting.

Eugene Meyer, association president, presided over the session, which was attended by Francis G. Addison, jr., Mrs. Frederick E. Altemus, Fontaine C. Bradley, Edward Burling, jr., Lee D. Butler, James A. Cobb, Beatrice Clephane, Sefton Darr, Waldron Faulkner, Edward G. Kemp, Milton W. King, Curtis McCalip, John A. Remon, Vincent Saccardi, John Saul, Odell S. Smith, William Roy Vallance, Ella C. Werner and Mrs. Harvey K. Wiley.

Police Department guests, besides Maj. Kelly, were Inspector Harvey C. Callahan and Capt. John Fowler.

Span Potomac With Pontoons, Reynolds Says

Senator Robert R. Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, yesterday offered to remedy Washington's cross-river traffic congestion with the aid of the United States Army Engineers.

The answer to the Capital's defense growing pains and the torrent of traffic across the Potomac and Anacostia Rivers is not tunnels but pontoon bridges, Reynolds told reporters.

"I'm serious about it," said the chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee. "The Army could throw across the Potomac in a few days as many bridges as the city needs—half a dozen of them if necessary."

Reynolds said it would be "good practice" for the Army, a lesson on defense mechanics for Washingtonians and would solve inexpensively and quickly the Potomac bottleneck problem of Arlington suburbanites and vice versa.

"If it doesn't work they can take them down" he said. "The engineers do it every day in maneuvers. But it will work. They run tanks across them. Why not city traffic?"

Reynolds said the "idea just occurred to me during all this talk about tunnels and new bridges that would take a long time and cost a lot of money."

Street Extension Contract Awarded By Commissioners

Contract for preliminary plans on the proposed extension of Independence Avenue Southwest from Fourteenth Street to Lincoln Memorial yesterday was awarded by the Commissioners to the firm of Modjeski & Master, of Harrisburg, Pa.

The project is partof the 44 million dollar highway improvement plan of Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, and will form an important approach to the Federal roads system proposed to service the new War and Navy building in Arlington.

The project is part of the 44 millpresent Fourteenth Street termination to Lincoln Memorial will necessitate removal of White House green houses, National Capital Parks work shops and garden sites on the Monument Grounds, it was reported.

Communion Breakfast

Team captains of Washington parishes represented in the Washington Catholic Retreat League will attend a communion mass and breakfast at 8 a. m. tomorrow in the Washington Retreat House, 4000 Harewood Road Northeast. The Rev. Martinelli Januarius, S. A., will celebrate the mass.

D. C. Taxi Rate Settlement Months Off, Hankin Says

Settlement of the taxi fare dispute may not be expected for several months, Gregory Hankin, chairman of the Public Utilities Commission, reported last night.

He indicated that studies by the commission of the zone-boundary problem will not be completed until spring.

A special order was issued by the PUC yesterday, instructing at least 10 per cent of all organized drivers in the city to submit, during December, January, February and March statements of their earnings and expenses.

This is in line with Hankin's announced intention of accumulating information on taxi revenues through a study of individual drivers' manifests. It was estimated that some 500 taximen will turn in monthly reports for the weeks starting December 14, January 18, February 15 and March 15.

Until a decision has been reached by the PUC, said Hankin, the current "temporary" 30-cent fare for any one zone will prevail.

Hankin's Public Utility Forum Meets With Citizens' Favor

Gregory Hankin, chairman of the District Public Utilities Commission, is one public official who is not afraid to get himself out on a limb.

This was the impression left with representatives of citizens' associations and other civic groups who attended his "Public Utilities Forum" at the District Building this week.

The forum which Hankin hopes to make a monthly affair drew a large crowd of civic leaders, many of whom expected to have their complaints salved with the usual speech about "contingencies," "budgets," "regulations," "Congressional inertia," etc.

Hankin surprised them by revealing concrete action to make the much-sought crosstown bus line a reality. He openly revealed his plans and gave objectors to this route or that route a chance to snipe at him before his plan receives final approval.

Instead of restricting discussion to the subject in hand and declaring statements about other complaints "out of order," he listened patiently while citizens from all over the city "unloaded" their prize local "injustices" on his shoulders and demanded that "something be done."

The demand that a people's counsel be appointed to the PUC was met by Hankin's promise to act personally as a people's counsel until the President sees fit to appoint one. The demand that the public be consulted before streetcar stops are changed was met with the announcement that the PUC had just ruled that informal hearings would be given before any final action is taken. Other demands were similarly handled.

Sheets of ruled paper were passed out to all the delegates present with the request that they write down their names, organizations and "remarks." He invited them to criticize his method of conducting the meeting and to pose problems to become the subject of future meetings.

He asked the members to treat attendance at meetings "with a certain amount of obligation" so that the meetings could become permanently established. He stated his willingness to listen to all their advice "unofficially," and to transmit the advice in the same manner to other members of the commission.

Announcing that he was going to start experimenting with bus and street car routes to improve service, Hankin admitted that he expected a "lot of heat."

Louis Johrden, Navy Veteran, Dies at Age 75

Louis Johrden, 75, a sailor in the "wooden ship" days of the U. S. Navy and more lately a Government building guard, died yesterday in an ambulance en route to Naval Hospital from his home at 545 Fourteenth Street Southeast.

JOHRDEN

A heart attack was given as the cause. Funeral services will be held at 10 a. m. Monday at the home, and burial will be in Arlington Cemetery at 11 o'clock with military honors.

Surviving are his widow, the former Mary Charlotte Hamilton, who came from Galway, Ireland; two sons, Timothy H. Johrden, employed at the Washington Navy Yard, and Louis G. Johrden, of the New York office of the Associated Press, and one daughter, Mrs. Cleland C. McDevitt, of Poolesville, Md.

Soon after enlisting in the Navy, Mr. Johrden was given the title of "ship's writer." He was retired from the Navy in 1916 but was recalled to serve in the World War at the Washington Navy Yard as warrant officer in the commissary.

Mr. Johrden bore such a resemblance to Gen. John J. Pershing that frequently he was mistaken for the World War generalissimo.

Chicago Passport Agency to Close In Proctor Death

The State Department announced yesterday that the passport agency in Chicago will be closed Monday, out of respect to the memory of Robert Alexander Proctor, passport agent there, who died following a heart attack.

Proctor was assigned to duty in the State Department from 1919 to 1923, when he was appointed passport agent at Chicago and had served continuously in that position until his death.

Proctor was an expert on citizenship laws and laws relating to passport matters in the United States and other principal countries of the world to which American citizens normally travel.

A brother, James M. Proctor, is associate justice of the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia.

Va. Bridge Speed Limit Will Stand

complaints anent the Little River "bottleneck," but that the bridge was beyond his jurisdiction.

He recalled, on the other hand, that the span—a "temporary" affair—was erected in 1935, and commented:

"They've had plenty of time since then to make it safe."

Gillen said repairs to the bridge have been made on three different occasions, but they apparently did not meet safety requirements.

Motorists who are irked by the delay have but two alternative routes—through Georgetown or past Arlington Memorial Cemetery, along Ridge Road.

During the afternoon rush period, drivers may choose to continue to the cemetery gates and turn right. However, no left turns are permitted from Ridge Road into Lee Boulevard—one of the county's principal thoroughfares—and traffic must then go through Rosslyn and into Wilson Boulevard.

Both Arlington and District traffic officials have repeatedly described the section immediately across Memorial Bridge—location of the wooden bridge in question—as probably the most congested spot in the metropolitan area during rush periods.

Davis Named Chairman Of Copper Hearings

Chester C. Davis, president of the St. Louis Federal Reserve District, was named yesterday as the chairman of public hearings to be held by OPM on possibilities of increasing the Nation's copper production.

The hearings were ordered by the Supply Priorities and Allocations Board, which called attention to "many conflicting" reports on copper output. It was understood hearings would begin December 12.

Mrs. Rosa Jordan, Widow Of Virginia Pastor, Dies

Mrs. Rosa Gwaltney Jordan, 70, widow of the Rev. Arthur C. Jordan, died yesterday at her home, 1708 Irving Street Northwest, after an illness of two months.

Mrs. Jordan, a native of Surrey County, Va., came to Washington with Mr. Jordan upon his retirement in 1925. Mr. Jordan, member of the Virginia Methodist Conference, died in 1937.

Mrs. Jordan was a member of the board of stewards of the Francis Asbury Methodist Church and had been active on many committees. She also belonged to the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

She is survived by a brother, Guerney Gwaltney, of Smithfield, Va., three daughters, Mrs. Essie J. Hill, Mrs. Denton H. Reed and Miss Nancy E. Jordan, all of Washington, and a son, Dr. Arthur C. Jordan, jr., of Detroit.

Dr. Robin Gould of Francis Asbury Church and Dr. J. J. Rives, of Richmond, will officiate at funeral services at 2 p. m. today in the church. Burial will be in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

British Nerve Doctors Idle, Satterfield Says

By the Associated Press

Representative Satterfield (Democrat), Virginia, who returned yesterday from a month's tour of duty as a naval observer at the American embassy in London, reported that "neurologists in the British Isles are looking for jobs."

"Suicides are down 75 per cent," he said. "When a man who contemplates the taking of his own life is suddenly faced with the realization that someone else is anxious to take it also, he immediately finds that living is a very pleasant occupation."

Still Can't Believe It, Says Mother Of Bette Gay

That is what Mrs. Leroy D. Bonbrest, of 1144 Branch Avenue Southeast, had to say yesterday after her first look at Bette Gay Bonbrest in 17 days.

Bette Gay, who will be one month old tomorrow, weighed 28½ ounces when she was born. Still confined to her incubator, she has not been weighed since but it is apparent that she has added considerably to her 11-inch body in all directions.

Mrs. Bonbrest left George Washington University Hospital for home on November 18 and had not been able to see her baby in the interim.

"It certainly was a sight," she said. "to watch Bette Gay go through an ounce of milk, which she drained from an eye dropper with tiny nipple attached."

SOME FOOD FOR THOUGHT!

T. Thomas Skinner is late for his dinner,
(A bit of a habit, the cad!)
His lovely wife Ida is fit to be tied
And the whole situation looks bad.

It's well understood Skinner's business is good,
Too good—that's really no joke!
He needs a few more men to help at the store—
So his dinner won't go up in smoke!

Now Ida is clever—she wishes forever
To wipe out this threat to her roast.
She cries out, "T. Thomas, I want you to promise
To call up THE WASHINGTON POST!" *

"A 'Help Wanted' ad! Yes, I'll run one, by gad,
And get myself out of this fix!"—
T. Thomas thus answers. And now they're romancers,
With dinner served promptly at six!

Official Side Line

Government officials in active service ought to have sense enough not to sell magazine articles based on private information acquired in the exercise of their duties. The practice has increased markedly in recent months. The inevitable result is that some officials now are accused—and roundly denounced by some commentators—of violating a cardinal principle of public policy. That principle, of course, is that public servants are not supposed to capitalize their positions for private gain. To maintain, as some have, that the proceeds from sales are turned over to charities or to underlings who actually write the articles is to evade the issue. Somewhere along the line somebody makes money from information which, if legitimately publishable, ought to be made available without charge.

This is particularly true of information pertaining to defense activities. Constantly tightening censorship of news is largely responsible for the increasing impression that the Government is withholding details which ought to be a matter of public record. On occasion such details have been kept from general distribution and then released—for a price—to limited magazine audiences. This delayed circumvention of the censorship system is a manifest abuse of official privilege. In effect it tends to discredit the basic premise of the whole censorship system. For not all officials see eye to eye on what may properly be published, even though events described may have occurred long since. Thus the time may come—indeed some feel that it has already come—when official disclosures in magazines might prove embarrassing to this or to other governments.

There is, of course, no effective legal restraint on the sale of such material, and there should be none. Public officials ought to be free to disseminate legitimate information and to see to it that it reaches the widest possible audience. But if the ethical inadvisability of selling articles does not impress Government heads, then they should be made to realize that by their discriminatory choice of a publishing medium they arbitrarily limit the degree of informed opinion in the country. For this there is no excuse whatever.

Japan's Case

The Japanese reply to the American inquiry for an explanation of the troop reinforcements in Indo-China is that those reinforcements are not there for further aggression. The reason for their presence is said to be that under an arrangement with Vichy France, the troops were moved in for protection against Chinese concentrations on China's side of the border. But if the Japanese expect Americans to believe such a story, they have a poor opinion of the American mentality. The United States has been witnessing Japan's aggression in the Far East since 1931. In that time the Japanese have gone a long way in the creation of a "co-prosperity sphere" aimed at covering all Asia with the flag of the Rising Sun. Their land forces have entrenched themselves in Manchuria and spread themselves over China proper. Their naval power has worked itself around the China Sea. Thailand is plainly in the scheme of Pax Japonica, and Thailand is next door to Indo-China. There might be some reason for increasing the occupation forces up to a reputed 100,000 if there had been civil commotion in Indo-China. But none has been reported. And it is absurd to think that China was about to attack Japan in Indo-China. Thus all the circumstances conspire to show that the Japanese are preparing for another snatch in their career of Asian conquest.

Such a pounce the ABCD powers must resist or resign themselves to extrusion from Asia. With Thailand added to the "co-prosperity sphere," the Japanese would have rounded out a strategic position for themselves affecting all the Pacific powers. The Philippines would be exposed all along their western flank. Our trade route from Indonesian ports, along which we bring tin and rubber and a whole line of tropical products, would always be in danger of being cut off. Singapore, which has equal value to the American position in the Far East as to the British position, would be menaced. The Dutch East Indies would be imperiled. Australia itself would see the Japanese shadow falling across the Antipodes. Finally, the Japanese on the northwestern frontier of Thailand would find themselves within a few miles of China's supply line, the Burma Road. That is the reason that all the Pacific powers seem to be in the last stages of preparation for a showdown. That preparedness will not be relaxed, but furthered. And the Japanese would be foolish to imagine that any effort to talk peace will meet with any success while they build up such a threatening position in Indo-China. The demobilization of that position should now be demanded, and without any quid pro quo. There is no longer any need, let alone any warrant, for buying off an aggressor.

Union Registration

The greatest danger which arises out of the Smith bill is that it might lead to a last-ditch fight over the rights of labor in this critical period. That measure is being denounced by labor leaders as a "vicious instrument of oppression." Undoubtedly it was passed by the House as a means of disciplining John L. Lewis and other leaders of a similar stripe whose recalcitrant attitude has provoked a national crisis. Fanned by the excitement of the times, the controversy which is thus shaping up could easily lead to a debacle in the production of weapons to defeat Hitlerism.

Congress can accomplish no useful purpose by including in such legislation unnecessary provisions which rankle in the hearts of the workers. As we pointed out yesterday, bad cases—that is to say gross abuse by some unions of the privileges granted them—do not make good law. And, of course, labor can only defeat its own best interests by blindly opposing any and all legislation designed to keep workers on the job in defense factories. If a satisfactory and workable law is to be enacted, bitterness and prejudice will have to be put aside in favor of reason and cooperation.

Virtually everyone who has studied the bill agrees that it ought to be amended in some major particulars before it becomes law. Take, for example, the provision requiring the registration of labor organizations whose members produce goods for interstate commerce. Many spokesmen for labor believe that the time has come to require an accounting from every agency which claims to represent employes in the collective bargaining process. Probably a vast majority of union members would prefer to have the business of their organizations transacted openly. Having been entrusted with enormous powers, unions owe the public an accounting for their stewardship, just as big corporations do. Such regulation has become necessary, moreover, as a means of protecting the workers themselves from racketeers.

In the Smith bill, however, this requirement for Federal registration does not appear to have been carefully drawn. It would expire along with the emergency provisions of the bill. That is certainly a mistake. For the chief value of such registration would come from the gradual sense of responsibility which it would cultivate among labor leaders. There is a question, too, as to whether the punishment prescribed is a proper one. The bill would disqualify unregistered organizations from acting as representatives of employes in collective bargaining proceedings, thus creating a danger that the rank and file of employes would be punished for the failings of union officers. Finally, 30 days is a very short period for the adjustments this provision would require of some unions.

Here certainly is a provision that ought to be considered solely on its merits. Every suggestion of penalizing labor by this means ought to be eliminated; for the basic purpose of this provision is to assist the rank and file of workers in evolving a more responsible type of collective bargaining. Labor leaders, for their part, ought to drop all pretense that this section involves an invasion of constitutional rights. It means only that, since labor is now a potent force in the field of interstate commerce, it must conform to a reasonable code of conduct in the public interest. If the provision is carefully revised so as to make it eminently fair and workable, the result will undoubtedly be an achievement of lasting value to both labor and the country as a whole.

Defense Costs

Defense is constantly pushing up into the stratosphere of finance. If the eight-billion-dollar supplemental defense appropriation bill now passed by the House is approved in its present form, total defense appropriations and contract authorizations voted during the current and the preceding fiscal year will be raised to no less than 68 billion dollars. The very hugeness of the sum makes it incomprehensible. A clear idea of the real cost of the defense program in terms of individual effort and individual sacrifice requires elucidation. First, the dollars must be viewed in relation to national income. Secondly, they must be broken down into the current rate of spending, for it is this current rate rather than the total outlay that is important from the standpoint of the individual citizen.

In this latter connection Senator George, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, reports that the Government will probably spend for all purposes about 36 billion dollars during the calendar year beginning January 1. Assume that about six and a half billion dollars of that total represents nondefense expenditures. Then the annual cost of the defense program during the next 12 months would amount to approximately 30 billion dollars. Even if the Nation's income should rise to 100 billion dollars during the coming year, national defense would thus absorb nearly one-third of the whole at that rate of defense spending!

However, the defense program, measured by the amount expended for defense each month, is not progressing as rapidly as had been expected. Hence it is quite likely that expenditures during the months ahead will fall below Senator George's estimates. Still it should be kept in mind that failure to step up defense expenditures as rapidly as anticipated does not mean that we shall ultimately spend less. It merely means that defense work is behind schedule, and that a larger proportion of national income will have to be diverted later to defense use. In any event OPM Director William Knudsen concluded that nearly half of our manufacturing capacity will have to be devoted to defense production during the coming year and still more in the following year. That is a telling way of envisaging the cost of defense in terms of individual sacrifice. It also emphasizes the fact that the real material cost of the defense program has to be shouldered by all the people right now, regardless of the financing methods followed by the Government.

Risen Sun

Mr. Marshall Field's mountain of money has at last been delivered of volume 1, No. 1, of the Chicago Sun. The result is a very fat infant of 72 pages, including an impressive quantity of display and classified advertising and 12 pages devoted to congratulatory messages from various local and national bigwigs. Certainly no journalistic parturition of this generation has been accompanied by quite so much excitement and publicity. One reason is that it seeks to challenge the supremacy of the Chicago Tribune in its own territory. This challenge the "world's greatest newspaper" has been quick to anticipate. At any rate, it appeared on the Sun's birthday with a news story which, it was hoped, would put the Sun into immediate eclipse—the story of the projected AEF of five million men. All in all, it was one of the biggest days in Chicago since the time Mayor Thompson threatened to bust the late George V of England in the snoot.

To those who expected some such journalistic innovation as Mr. Field's wild oat, P. M., the first issue of the Chicago Sun must have seemed an anticlimax. The format is full-sized and the typography, save for the use of 9-point body type in all articles, as severely orthodox as those of the other Suns of New York and Baltimore. The treatment of news and features is on the whole quite conventional. Front-page banner lines are given to the revolt in Serbia and to a quarrel between the Illinois Federation of Labor and the State director of labor. On page 3 appeared a four-column cut of the kind of picture known to the trade as "cheesecake." A three-column picture on another page showed policemen rescuing a dog from the Chicago River. Evidently Mr. Field and his editors intend to play the percentages, as the baseball people call it.

The good Old Reliables were also evident on the editorial page. For example, the character-building efficacy of the 4-H clubs was warmly approved. Another editorial made the indisputable point that in the past five years many profound changes have occurred in women's hats, in the design of motor cars, and in the international situation. Letters to the Editor included one deploring the fad for long painted fingernails, and another protesting that when it comes to first-run movie releases, Hollywood is treating the citizens of Chicago like so many hicks. On the opposite page, along with Mr. Lindley and the other columnists, is a quiz feature. ("What three letters are often seen on tombstones?")

But to observe this journalistic conventionality is not to depreciate the importance of the occasion. Mr. Field's courage in starting from absolute scratch to provide the people of Chicago with a second morning newspaper, and to give them the other side of the argument in the all-important question of foreign policy, deserves the warmest applause. For two decades or more the mortality among daily newspapers has been tremendous. But now Mr. Field has encouraged newspapermen everywhere to hope that the trend may soon be in the opposite direction. So, then, here's to the Sun—long may it shine!

THE LOST RETURNING

Perhaps the day will come when I can walk
With calm, unhurried steps along this street
Thinking of nothing, pausing then to talk
With someone's children anyone might meet.
That day I plan to walk quite slowly by
The bridge and marsh, and past the willow tree
Seeing as strangers all the paths that cry
Look down this way—down here—remember me?

I shall see other houses then, not one;
There will be lilacs at some other door;
Nothing will change except an exile done,
The lost returning, lonelier than before,
Listening again for voices long unheard,
Knowing this silence for their final word.

Garbo-Douglas Film

Why waste so generous a quarter of your paper page to announce the presentation of the much-discussed Garbo-Douglas film? This film which is such a display of disrespect for the American principle of morai decency has already advertised itself in its preview, an indignity to which many of your subscribers have been subjected. The usual unfair advantage, namely: intrusion upon a good, enjoyable picture, in this case, the Irene Dunne-Montgomery production. We have already, Mr. Editor, been warned as to the standing of this picture. Where have you been, Mr. Editor? This film has definitely advertised itself; been judged and condemned.

The writer of this letter is a mother who left the theater while Garbo-Douglas displayed generously what evidently was considered the high light of the production.

In conclusion, the price is being paid, believe it or not, and your country and mine is awaiting at the moment a day, the birthday of the Prince of Peace. Peace while glorifying immorality means but one thing, so dreaded by all humans. Peace is the American standard. It is strange indeed that the evils which have brought down on man and country desolation and destruction should be embraced and encouraged by the very ones who should do all in their power, equipped as they are with the necessary tools, to crush evil of all kinds lest we, too, become the victims of such horror as that taking place in the world today.

Hitler-Stalin Relations

Archbishop Curley, of Baltimore and Washington, ranking Catholic prelate of this district, warns us of a possible new deal, between Hitler and Stalin. Stranger things have happened, even when the world was less upset than now.

Those of us who have watched the career of Stalin will agree with the Archbishop about the bloody record of Stalin, although we might not think it just the best time to make such comment.

If Hitler is clever at anything, it is in plots and counter-plots, and then some. He may wait till the supplies we are sending to Russia are of sufficient volume, then he will talk Stalin into joining him in his utterly damnable scheme of world conquest.

That's something to think about, to save us from too much optimism about crushing Hitler.

Harpers Ferry Incident

I was much interested in the pictures and discussion of Harpers Ferry contained in your pictorial supplement of November 30.

It was my father, Brig. Gen. Roger Jones, late Inspector-General, United States Army, who was in command of the little band of Federal troops who fired the arsenal in April 1861 to prevent its falling into the hands of the Confederates. He was then Lieut. Roger Jones, and on his own in initiative set fire to the arsenal, which contained some 20,000 stacks of arms. He had learned that the Confederates were marching on in such numbers that his own small force could not possibly hold it. He then withdrew his men in good order.

For this action my father received the thanks of the Government, and I own a letter written to him at the behest of the President by the then Secretary of War, Simon Cameron, thanking him and his men for their "judicious conduct" on behalf of the Government at Harper's Ferry Armory.

Many years after the Civil War, when on one of his inspection trips in this region, my father got into conversation on the train, with a former Confederate. This man described to him how disappointed the Confederate force was on arriving at Harpers Ferry to find the armory burned, and he added they "knew there was but a small force of Federal troops there, and had we gotten those arms, nothing would have prevented our marching on Washington."

Secret Ballot

The vote on the Smith labor bill shows what can happen whenever Republicans and Democrats are ready to put their country's welfare ahead of party advantage.

Too strict an adherence to party lines has been the curse of this Nation. John Jones, a loyal American, walks to the polls on election day and cancels the vote of Bill Smith his neighbor, also a loyal American, for no better reason than that one of them calls himself a Republican and the other calls himself a Democrat. In the meantime the Communists and labor racketeers walk into control of their Government and laugh at both of them.

The American people should insist upon the retention of that part of the Smith bill providing for Government supervised secret elections in a plant before a strike can be called. As long as men feel that they must vote to strike because they will be browbeaten and intimidated if they do not do so, just so long can the labor racketeers precipitate strikes against the wishes of the men who do the actual work. The Congressman who is not willing for the worker to have that elemental protection of his rights stamps himself as in favor of violence in the conduct of labor affairs.

Mankind's Verdict

The day will come when mankind will wipe its feet on Adolf Hitler. This seems cruel, but that is the way the world treats its enemies, and Hitler is one of the world's greatest enemies.

A Southerner Examines War Policy

Another step has been taken toward "backing up" our allies against Hitler, a very commendable one for those who voted for this repeal of the Neutrality Law in the House and Senate; as for those who kept their promises to their constituents (made while up for election, and while conditions in the world were much quieter than now) they should get back on the van and let Mr. Roosevelt do the driving. He is not going to get us into a war wholly unprepared.

We are all in the same boat now. Hitler forgives no enemies. He may "stuff" them until their respective killing time comes, as he did "friend" Stalin.

As for us, we should speed up production of combat planes, light and heavy tanks, and antitank guns, machine guns, ammunition. Induct more and more men into the respective services and intensely train them in the use of these above-mentioned implements of warfare, for we will get a chance to use them before the "smoke settles."

No war has ever been won by an inferior army; there must be a preponderance of planes, tanks, etc., and personnel, the power of which would be obvious to all in the enemy camp. Of course there must be intelligent use of all this power.

Step by step, each point to be occupied must be carefully reconnoitered, and when the attack is made it must be made with overwhelming power. There must be no setbacks. This has been a secret of Hitler's success to date.

Initial successes are also very helpful to the morale of troops and the people at home, and equally depressing to enemy troops and civilian personnel, and the "fence-sitters," such as Japan, will have cause to ponder.

As for France and her possessions, diplomatic relations should not be severed immediately, but we should proceed at once to occupy such of her possessions as are a threat to our cause or that have a strategic value to us.

War is war, whether it is declared or not. France, a conquered nation, is a tool of Germany—a tool, even if she is unwilling at heart. Such possessions as we occupy would be returned to her when Hitler is thoroughly defeated.

As for Japan, we should get her on our side if possible; but no friend, China or Russia, should be "sold out" to get her there, as such friends won't stay when the going gets tough. I would prefer China for a friend, between the two, China or Japan.

The Japs are wise. They have been, and are, treated by Hitler as tools in the same manner that he treated Russia before the "killing time" arrived. The Japanese should realize that Hitler, if successful, would not tolerate a highly armed "yellow peril" in the Orient as lords of rubber and nickel and the world's cheapest labor. They, if wise, will join the democracies and Russia and contribute at once in an active manner to the downfall of Hitlerized Germany. Better a half-loaf, my Japanese friends, than none at all and slavery under the German "Herren."

They should realize that Britain and America are just getting ready to fight, and when our potential strength is loosed, that Germany cannot win, in the long run, and it is going to be a "long run."

The Japanese fought Germany in the last World War, and Hitler does not forget an enemy of Germany, past or future, both in her case. If Germany should win by some dumb act of America and Britain, Japan is a natural enemy of Germany, past and future.

America, Britain, China, Russia and the Netherlands are going to "wear" Germany and Italy "out," and Japan, too, if she joins the Germans. We have the power. Japan had better join "in" with us, for the Germans and Italians are going to be put "out" on the home stretch.

There is a saying in the deep South among the darkies: "When the white folks gits to feuding, I sho' is going with my white folks, for if I don't, after he cleans up the white trash, he will burn the woods and sift de ashes for me, and I sho' don't want to be among no ashes."

America and Britain will not forget foes, or friends; both will be justly rewarded.

The Post Impressionist

A Berl Of Cider

The moon was like a goblet of cider when they met under the sycamore tree. They stamped around, blew out their breath in plumes, beat their gloved hands together, and talked in hushed masculine grunts with an occasional hearty laugh quickly broken off.

Elmer Martin, the storekeeper, stood a head taller than the others. He was wearing his hunting cap. Elmer kept looking this way and that way. Finally he scuffed his feet, cleared his throat and raised his voice:

"Where's them dogs of yours, Hezekiah?"

"You mean Swan?"

"Swan! You tell me you got us out here to follow one ol' hound bitch?"

"As I recall it," Lawyer Turbeyfill joined in, "you agreed to furnish a pack of coon dogs." The little man wrapped his muffler tighter around his throat. "Now all you got is Swan."

Hezekiah's brother Henry spat into the darkness with a whistle. "Ain't nothin' wrong with Swan," he declared belligerently. "My day, I seen her tree more varmints 'n airy pack in the county. Give 'er a woop, Hezzie!"

Elmer's protest was drowned by Hezekiah's response. "WHOOP!" yelled Hezzie. "WHOOOOOO! Hark t'me, gal!"

"'At got 'er!" Henry exulted. "Hear 'at bell!"

"I didn't hear nothin'," said Elmer. "Where you think she is?"

"She loose ahead," said Henry. "We allus turn her loose." As he started down the hill, the moonlight shone weirdly in the red stubble on his chin. "She out this way," he explained. "Out on the old Rollins place."

Six men fell in behind the two brothers, filing down a gulley.

"I still didn't hear nothin'," Elmer insisted. They entered a wood of oak and hickory.

"There she barks!" shouted Hezzie. "WHOOOO! Hark t'me, gal!"

"Heard 'at, didn'ye?" Henry challenged.

Elmer snorted. "I heard it, but that ain't no huntin' dog. That dog is tied up."

Henry spat again. "I be dawg if 'at's a tied-up dawg. 'At dawg on a hot scent."

"All right," said Elmer. "But it sounds like a yard dog to me."

"WHOOOO!" shouted Hezzie obediently. "Hark t'me, gal!"

"Come on," said Henry. "We got to climb out this gulley."

"Now, look here," Elmer objected. "I know a little about huntin' too, and I know that a no dog that's got nothin' in the ground. That dog is bayin' the moon. Besides, it ain't the same dog we heard before. I don't believe you even know what became of your old hound."

"Don' pay no tension to him, Hezzie," Henry counseled his brother. "He ain't seed a coon in two year."

Elmer followed the procession in sour silence as it swung off into the deep woods. The moon rode high and became a beacon while they struggled through the underbrush. "Giver 'er a whoop, Hezzie." Henry suggested during a pause beside a mountain ivy thicket. Hezzie obeyed, but there was no response. "Don't make no nevermind," Henry ruled. "'Twas this way."

Elmer could keep silence no longer. "You ain't got no idea where that dog is," he said. "I bet you a berl of apple cider your old hound is lost."

As if in answer to Elmer, there arose far behind them the melodious Owp, Owp of a dog following a scent.

"Come on, everybody," cried Henry.

"WHOOOO," shouted Hezzie. The twain swung around.

They were out of breath long before they regained the ravine. The barking had ceased.

The two Barbour brothers, the carpenters, conferred, looking up at the moon directly overhead.

"We're goin' home," Fred announced to the rest of the party. "Anybody else wanna come along?"

"I might as well quit now," said Jerry Sampson. "I'll have to get packed up for college again tomorrow."

"I stepped in the run and got my foot wet," said Fox MacPherson. "No use letting it blister."

"Well, I ain't givin' up now," Elmer broke in querulously. "I got a berl of cider on this."

"I'll take you on 'at bet," Henry answered. "Give 'er a whoop Hezzie!"

A distant howl was the reply, and Elmer snorted.

"Come on," said Lawyer Turbeyfill, rewrapping his muffler. "We might as well see this thing through."

"Let's git up t'other side," Henry urged.

The four climbed the steep walls of the ravine, untangled themselves from a barb-wire fence, and crashed into a clearing as a series of yaps clove the after-midnight air.

"Who dat?" shouted a voice. "You git or I fire!" whereupon a shotgun blasted the tender night apart. They tumbled down the bank, to chase a phantom Swan over hill and through hollow away from a waning moon. They stood on marshy ground as the light came, and out of a nebulous dawn the sun congealed like a fried egg on a greasy platter.

"White Oak Swamp," grunted Elmer.

Hezzie pushed his hat back and scratched his head.

"You know, Henry," he said, "I just remember, I be John Brown if I didn' leave Swan locked up in the corn crib."

"Pay me!" cried Elmer. "A berl of apple cider!"

"Now you hush your fool mouth, Hezzie," Henry put in hastily. "I'll do the talkin'. Now, Elmer, you bet Swan was lost. She ain't no more lost as you are. She locked up in the corn crib."

"None of your quivocatin'," Elmer argued. "You said she was in the woods, and she ain't. Lawyer Turbeyfill, I appeal to you."

"I'm sorry, Elmer," the little man replied, adjusting his muffler. "You bet she was lost. She isn't lost. I guess you'll have to pay."

"Nuts," said Elmer. "I'll take it out of 'em at the store."

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Well Done

THE HOUSE of Representatives has now provided the necessary foundation for a constructive labor policy. The events of the past year have shown that Congressional action was necessary. For thus far in this emergency, unlike that of 1917, the leaders of organized labor and the Administration have been unable to reach a voluntary agreement to keep the defense industries working.

LIPPMANN

Now that the House has acted, and has formally recognized the existence of an unlimited national emergency, Mr. Murray and Mr. Green have no real choice but to do what Samuel Gompers began doing in May, 1917—that is to enter into serious negotiations with the Government in order to make over-all agreements for a national labor policy. When they have stopped to think about what the House has done, they will see that this is now their best, and indeed their only practical, course of action.

THE BILL now goes to the Senate where there will be hearings and then debate. In part it will be the duty of the Senate to examine the procedures of this rather hastily improvised bill and to prepare to perfect them. But the Senate will also, of course, have to consider the basic principles of the bill, whether to accept them, to modify them, or reinforce them. Here the final decision of the Senate, and of Congress as a whole, will be determined by the attitude of the labor leaders on the bill and by what the Senators see going on in the defense industries and in labor matters generally.

Thus if Mr. Murray and Mr. Green decide to fight the bill, and to oppose all legislation, they will surely get at least this bill, and quite possibly an even stronger one. For an irreconcilable attitude will be regarded by Congress and by an overwhelming majority of the people as self-evident proof that the legal repression of strikes and union abuses in defense industries has become necessary. If in addition to being irreconcilable on the bill, Mr. Murray and Mr. Green also countenance serious strikes, the final bill will surely be far stronger than this, in principle at least, essentially moderate bill.

If, on the other hand, Mr. Murray and Mr. Green have the good sense to accept the main purposes of the bill, they can almost surely obtain from Congress concessions on certain features of the bill. If they are really wise, they will, however, go further: they will negotiate at once, during the hearings and before the Senate has finished its debate, a general agreement which not only commits labor and management to work without interruption but looks forward to working harder to produce more weapons.

THE MOST foolish thing they could do is just to fight this bill. For in its objectives this bill contains nothing that they can oppose without putting themselves in a very uncomfortable position now and for the future. They really cannot take the position that the provisions requiring mediation impair their inalienable rights. The railroad workers have a similar law and they are surely just as much free Americans as anyone else. The provisions calling for registration and a public accounting and for secret ballots within unions are no more objectionable in principle than the laws for the protection of insurance policyholders and of savings bank depositors.

The provisions outlawing jurisdictional and sympathetic strikes and boycotts are a limitation on the right to strike; but since such strikes are intolerable during an unlimited national emergency, the constructive answer by the labor leaders should be a voluntary pact with the Government to approve no strikes of this sort. The provision freezing the open shop, the closed shop, the union shop is not, perhaps, desirable legislation in itself; but Mr. Gompers accepted the principle by voluntary agreement in 1917. A similar agreement now for this emergency would make it unnecessary for Congress to legislate on a subject that it would be better for Congress not to have to legislate about. The same may be said of the provisions about picketing: a voluntary agreement to adjust disputes without strikes will mean that there are no picket lines in defense industries, and therefore legislation will be academic.

IN OTHER WORDS, the House has made a declaration of objectives. Some of them should obviously be made the law without opposition, once the procedure has been scrutinized and perfected. Others will have to be made law unless the labor leaders, by a voluntary but binding pact with the Government, make it unnecessary for Congress to legislate.

The wise policy for Mr. Murray and Mr. Green is, therefore, to accept in principle all of the bill that deals with mediation, with the registration of unions, with their accounts, and with the secret ballot; and secondly, to negotiate a voluntary agreement covering the objectives which, if possible, it would be better not to make the subject of legislation. By this course they will preserve all their rights and yet do their duty to the country.

THEY WILL be under no illusions as to why the House decided to pass the bill. A long series of strikes which have weakened the national defense and even more seriously weakened the influence of the country in the world, a long series of abuses within many of the unions, culminated in actions by Mr. John L. Lewis, which in the eyes of most Americans were very near to the edge of insurrection. Mr. Lewis placed the Government in a position where for a time it seemed that the choice lay between an intolerable humiliation and the horrid necessity of calling out the troops.

It was inconceivable that Congress could ignore the challenge. For if it had, the Nation would have found itself faced with the fact that a private individual had in time of great danger defied the Government of the United States. No such defiance can be tolerated from anyone, be he a labor leader or the publisher of a newspaper or anyone else. The rights guaranteed under the Constitution to every man do not include, and never have included, the right to defy the lawful authority of the Government, or willfully to endanger the security of the state upon which all the rights of all men depend.

Therefore, when rights are abused by anyone, the Government must for the protection of the rights of all the people accept the challenge and firmly assert its authority. This is what the House has done. And the country will be the better for it.

Rich and Strategic Thailand Watches 4000-Mile Frontier

In more ways than one, points out a bulletin from the National Geographic Society, Thailand (Siam) is in the middle of conflicting international interests in southeast Asia. Geographically, it is surround by colonies of Great Britain, the Netherlands, and France, with Japan occupying the latter's Indo-China territory.

"About a hundred air miles to the north, across the common border of British-held Burma and French Indo-China," says the bulletin, "lies the southwest corner of embattled China," says the bulletin, "lies the line along the Burma Road.

"Although Thailand is a little smaller than Colorado and New Mexico combined, it has an extremely extended boundary. The frontier runs more than 4000 miles, and includes the deeply indented coast of the Gulf of Siam and the western shoreline of the slim 'tail' of Thai territory along the Malay Peninsula.

"Because of its peculiar formation, the main part of Thailand not only is sandwiched between Japanese-dominated French Indo-China and British Burma, from east to west, but its Malay 'tail' also separates British Burma from the Malay States. At the latter's tip is Britain's chief Asiatic base of Singapore. South and southwest of the Thai section of the Malay Peninsula, the Malay States and the big Netherlands island of Sumatra together control the strategic Strait of Malacca, leading from the Indian Ocean to the South China Sea.

"Much of Thailand is made up of dense forest and jungle. The bulk of its resources and its 15 or 16 million people are found in the broad central plain, which holds the polyglot exotic capital of Bangkok."

Refugee Immigrants

MOST COUNTRIES of Latin America are today underpopulated, vast expanses of land which could be developed and made useful to mankind. Still, almost every one of those nations today has stringent laws restricting the immigration of foreigners. Basically the problem is one of the type of immigrant needed and emigrant available.

A Spanish liner carried for months a group of political refugees from Europe all over eastern South America. The press of South America, expressing the feeling of the people, felt deep sympathy for these unhappy travelers facing the alternative of having to return to a continent that did not want them. After direct appeal to the Queen of the Netherlands, these homeless expatriates were allowed to remain in Dutch Guiana, a South American land owned by a European power.

The official view of immigration authorities in those nations is that in their great majority these refugees from Europe requesting visas to South America are city people unprepared to undertake tasks of an agricultural nature in utterly strange environment. Their willingness to work the soil is one dictated by desperation. Their tendency is to return to the large cities at the first opportunity, and even in cities of South America there is no abundance of work. The result is unemployment for the native or hunger for the newcomer.

Strangely enough, only two nations in Latin America have taken official steps to receive mass immigration at present: the Republic of Paraguay and the Dominican Republic in Central America.

Paraguay has for a good many years provided land to some religious groups in the Chaco country. Among these the Mennonites have been particularly successful because they were farming people before they left Europe and the eastern United States. They have made parts of the Chaco a rich country, producing cotton, quebracho, yerba mate and other valuable crops.

Right now the Paraguayan government is working on the removal to that republic of an additional 300 American Mennonites whose traveling permission has been already granted by the State Department. One difficulty not overcome yet and which has caused delays in the departure of the Mennonites is their reluctance to submit to photography, an important item in the preparation of their passports.

The Minister of Paraguay to the United States, Don Juan Jose Soler, points with pride that this valuable human element should choose this country for their future home: "My country is not only peace-loving but also truly democratic to assure these Mennonites equal standing and equal rights with our citizens," he declares. "They know that they can find in Paraguay all the guarantees the United States has to offer them, plus low-price and rich land. Many Mennonites before before them can testify to this fact."

Gen. Trujillo's Dominican Republic is the other nation which has opened its doors to immigration. Plans have been made to receive many thousands of European refugees in land donated by Gen. Leonidas Trujillo personally. Since this is a very new project, less than 300 refugees have thus far found a home in the land. It has a very fertile soil. White immigration will improve the racial stock of the Dominican population.

THE OFFICIAL HOST of the Dutch government in the Guiana, Mynher J. C. Kielstra, Governor of Surinam, at present receiving the American troops in that part of South America, occupies the low government mansion of Paramaribo, in its appearance and atmosphere a perfect example of official European colonial life.

The building, surrounded by rich tropical gardens, faces a statue of Queen Wilhelmina as she looked in the very late nineteenth century. Clustered around the Governor's home are other government buildings of red brick with white columns and adornments. The whole square is very official and neat looking. The servants from the Governor's Mansion, as well as from closeby offices, wear gleaming white uniforms. Those on attendance at the mansion wear knee-breeches of black satin, yellow vest and very tight-fitting coats fastened with silver buttons. The atmosphere within is one of rigorous etiquette, befitting a kingdom with vast and rich colonial possessions.

It is to be hoped that Col. Parlye D. Parkinson, head of the American Expeditionary Forces, remembered to take along his full-dress uniforms for his formal reception as the Dutch are punctilious.

TWO CANDIDATES to the presidency of Chile, vacant today by the sudden death of Don Pedro Aguirre Cerda, are flying to Chile right now. Weather conditions have compelled one, Don Gabriel Gonzalez, coming from France, to wait in New York for clipper service to Santiago.

The other, until a few days ago a visitor to Washington, is also leaving after spending some time in the States. He is Senator Eduardo Cruz Coke, an outstanding medical man of Chile and prominent in conservative circles of his country.

Fate will have it that they probably are flying together in the same plane although they belong to opposed political camps.

This means that for at least three days they will share the quarters of the American Clipper, taking them to far-away Chile where their friends will meet them, separate them and prepare them for a formidable political battle.

Before this, however, and during the flight, they may have ample opportunities to discuss their views and will probably arrive in Santiago as good friends, ready to fight for their ideals and for the best of the country.

The Food Front

By J. B. Priestly

Short Rations Are Monotonous

London (By Wireless)

HOW IS our food in Britain now that we have entered the third winter of the war? (Incidentally, this is not a question that can be adequately answered by American visitors who only stay a few weeks and do their eating at the Savoy and the Ritz.) Probably the best answer is that we have enough food to maintain our health and strength, but not enough to make eating much of a pleasure.

At first when our consumption of meat, fats and sweet things was cut down I believe most people benefited, just as most people in America would probably benefit if they ate less of these rich foods. I know I found myself losing weight, although I was too busy to take exercise; and on the whole, in spite of much hard work and nervous strain, I felt better than I did before the war. But that phase has now passed.

I do not mean that people are now feeling the effects of undernourishment. It is true that children evacuated to our hostels in the country always put on weight immediately, which suggests that many of them were not being too well fed in the cities. But on the whole I have seen few signs of undernourishment and public health figures do not suggest that resistance to disease is unhealthy, though I'll confess I find myself slower in accumulating energy to replace that lost during late night work and tiring journeys. I suspect that this is partly due to lack of energizing foods. But it is hard to know how far general conditions, quite apart from diet, are having an effect upon us.

We have always plenty of good bread, certain vegetables and an adequate ration of meat and the like. We are short of fish, eggs and cheese unfortunately, for these, to my taste, would more than compensate us for any slender rationing of meat. Children are all guaranteed a reasonable ration of fresh milk and I am told that early this year the consumption of milk reached a new high level. But the adult ration has been cut down lately and we could do with more.

It is, of course, a great nuisance being so short of fresh fruit. Here we have been unlucky because a fine crop of English apples (which taste better than they look) might nearly have restored the balance, but most of the apple crop was ruined by bad weather. When you drink a tumbler of orange juice or bite a juicy pear or apple just remember us, kindly, and then perhaps a ghost of the flavor might float our way.

My wife, who really ought to be writing this article, declares the shortage of good cooking fats has taken much of the pleasure out of eating. Rich cakes and pastries, of course, have almost disappeared, so that unnecessary but splendid "afternoon tea" (against which our doctors often warned us) is not at all what it was in peacetime. It is difficult, too, to fry things properly, which means a whole host of quick, tasty dishes have vanished.

In one respect most Americans would suffer less than we do. That is in the matter of breakfast, a meal that most of my American friends seem to trifle with rather than enjoy. The English breakfast used to be a solid meal, with bacon and eggs and kidney sausages followed by plenty of bitter marmalade on buttered toast. Unhappily, nearly all these things are scarce now, with the result that breakfast, especially in hotels, is the poorest of all our meals. Perhaps at the end of this war we will join the far more numerous light-breakfast peoples.

DINING CAR service on our trains was cut down some time ago and now it is to disappear entirely. But we never had the excellent food you have on your trains, and most of us are quite reconciled to the idea of eating a few sandwiches, though we will miss having nothing to drink with them.

One good thing is coming out of this food rationing and that is that the British people are learning to dine out, a pleasant, civilized practice that was never popular with the mass of folks here. There is now a great deal of communal eating, not only in the works canteens where food is usually reasonably good and very cheap, but also in communal feeding centers, generally called British restaurants though sometimes having fancy names, that can now be found throughout the country. Here, too, the food is generally good enough and of about the same quality as that in your cheaper cafeterias, though there is less variety.

I would like to think, too, that sheer necessity is teaching many of our housewives, especially the younger ones, to take a serious interest in their kitchens, to mix brains in their cooking. If the war does that and also makes us enjoy eating out communally, then in spite of the monotony of short rations we shall be better off at the end of the war than we were at the beginning.

MEANWHILE, the vast operations of our very energetic food ministry, backed by the gallantry of our merchant marine service, has enabled us to snap our fingers at Hitler's boasts about starving us.

I announce with mixed pride and regret that once more I am beginning to put on weight.

The Gallup Poll

Average U. S. Family Consumes Only Half As Much Milk as Health Experts Advise

This is the second of a series of three surveys by the Gallup Poll on public health questions.

By Dr. George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., Dec 5.—One of the most difficult tasks of health and nutrition experts has always been the problem of getting people to consume more milk.

Since 1916, Government health authorities have recommended at least one quart of milk per day for each child, and one pint per day for each adult.

The Institute's survey reveals that, for the country as a whole, the typical family consumes about half as much milk as the Government recommends for health.

One half of all families in the United States, the survey indicates, consume 1.2 quarts or less per family per day. If the Government health recommendations were followed, these same families would consume over twice that amount.

In the lower income groups—the families earning less than $25 to $30 a week—the median average of milk consumption is approximately one quart per family per day, or less than half the amount recommended by health authorities.

The low consumption of milk apparently does not arise entirely from ignorance of the amount that should be consumed.

The survey found, for example, that 65 per cent of persons in families with one or more members under 21 years of age knew that one quart of milk or more a day is the amount recommended by the Government.

In a second question, the survey found that 17 per cent of all families — or approximately six million families—say they have changed their diets in recent months almost entirely because of higher prices of food.

Those who have reduced their living standard because of higher food costs have tended to cut out the very foods which the Government has been trying to get them to use. The principal items reduced because of costs, the survey shows, are meat, eggs and butter, milk, and fresh vegetables.

In the low income groups, where 20 per cent indicated a reduced diet range because of higher food prices, the omission of foods rich in minerals and vitamins was particularly pronounced.

Yet the Department of Agriculture has been concentrating its efforts to persuade families to consume more dairy products and green leafy vegetables, not less.

SUNDAY—The third Gallup Poll report on public health questions will be published tomorrow. It will show what the public knows about vitamins, whether the average American knows what vitamins are in which foods, and how many think vitamins are just a passing fad.

Canada United On Aid to Soviet

By Canadian Institute of Public Opinion

Toronto, Canada, Dec. 5.—Solid unity of Canadian public sentiment in favor of military aid to Russia is revealed in the latest poll by the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion, affiliate of the American Gallup Poll.

This study shows that 91 per cent of voters polled throughout the dominion approve of Britain and Canada sending arms and other war supplies to Russia—an indication that Hitler's assault on Communist Russia has failed to drive a wedge between Britain and her dominion ally.

All provinces returned a high vote of approval in this sampling referendum; even Quebec showed a favorable majority of more than four to one.

He is a "fixer to the core
In Uncle Sam's distress;
He's out for getting more and more
With honor less and less.

To him a grave emergency—
Grave peril to his land—
Is but an opportunity
To make another "grand."

The hour of his country's need—
Her suffering and pain—
They're nothing but another lead
To very easy gain.

Unmoved is he by church aflame
Or charred and blackened hut;
He leers without a trace of shame
"I gotta get my cut."

To calls for sacrifice he will Concede three cheers a day—
(Then help to jack up every bill
The country has to pay!)

Each time the U. S. anthem's played
He joins in with great vim;
He cheers the old flag, I'm afraid,
For all it's worth TO HIM!

He roots the draftees off to war
And marches near their ranks—
Then helps increase a little more
The cost of guns and tanks.

He doffs his bonnet when—gee whiz!—
The colors by him swing
But still his love of country is
A strict percentage thing.

He'll make a patriotic speech
If he is asked for it
And for preparedness he'll screech—
If he can "GET" his bit!

He'll wear a flag in his lapel
And press for all-out war;
He'll work for Uncle Sam likell
For 10 PERCENT OR MORE!

Heat Is On To Curb Unioneers

WE MUST LOOK to the Washington journalists for intelligent speculation as to the action which the Senate will take on the Smith bill or other legislation for the purpose of curbing the unioneers who have set themselves up as bosses, some of them as brutal dictators, over millions of men and women and as collectors of taxes, tribute and plain graft from the entire American Nation. The Smith bill, as amended and adopted by the House, seems to miss the fundamental point of the union trouble in emphasizing defense of war projects. The provision for registration of unions with the Department of Labor and for the filing of information about dues, fees, finances and the identity of union officials appears to apply to unions in their relations with ordinary industry, but the law, in the main, bears on the war industries. Unless we are to decide that war is our only occupation now and accept the gloomy prospect that there will be no private works of peace again from this time on, the laws to govern the conduct of unions and their officials should be broadened to afford protection against outrageous activity in the normal occupations and industries.

PEGLER

The Senate is more suave and tricky than the House, more compact and afflicted with a pompous self-importance, and probably will try to swindle the country out of a square deal. This the Senate did last year, when the House passed a good bill which was smothered in the Upper House, obviously by command of the executive branch. The Senate undoubtedly will try the same trick again, but this time the heat is on and the attempt at frustration probably will take the form of a fake. Neither the Senate nor the Labor Committee of the House, which is an A. F. L. stooge headed by Mrs. Mary Norton, of the notorious Frank Hague machine, can be trusted for a moment. They require watching and frank goading from the people.

MAJORITY LEADER McCORMACK said in the House in the debate on the Smith measure: "We are not on the kill today; while I favor passing some labor legislation, it should not be punitive."

He was correct, but he was ignoring the fact that the Administration has earned deep suspicion by its stubborn, tricky obstruction of all previous attempts to enact relief from unconscionable conduct by professional, political and, often, criminal unioneers. The punitive mood which he seemed to sense was the fault of a contemptuous executive branch of the Government which had sneered at all temperate, moderate efforts to repair the manifest indecencies of the Wagner Act.

The President himself, as he lately revealed in another instalment of his private papers, long ago recognized the iniquities of this act, and Frances Perkins only recently and very reluctantly admitted the necessity to establish the principle of the open shop and to place the unions under certain reasonable compulsions. But over the years the White House has been responsible for the neglect, indeed the refusal, of the national Legislature to remedy these evils.

MR. McCORMACK was right and no punitive measures are needed. Amendment of the Wagner Act by one process or another so as to protect workers from coercion by unions as well as by employers, who now are the only ones forbidden to coerce, would not be a punitive action. Labor would not be punished, but would be benefited by a law forbidding unions to impose interstate boycotts, and certainly would lose nothing by a law requiring that strike proposals and union elections be submitted to the rank and file by secret ballot, under the supervision of some public authority.

It is a notorious fact that many billions of dollars, stet, many billions, not mere millions, have been wrung from the workers by the professional unioneers and that only pennies of this enormous tribute have been accounted for in the last eight years. So the worker could not be punished and undoubtedly would be very grateful for any law that would put the union bosses under a requirement to account for all monies down to the last nickel.

THERE ARE many other corrections which would be happily received as benefits, not as punishments, by the rank and filer who pays the dues and turns out under orders to walk the picket lines, but it may be noticed that the Smith bill, even with its amendments, though dramatic, is deplorably incomplete.

At last the House seems to have realized, with a start, that the arrogant, ignorant union lobbyists who prowl the halls of Congress threatening reprisals represent not the workers but only their own greedy and often crooked rackets and may be kicked out and run off the place with impunity. Like the bulldozing, hot-eyed critics of the old prohibition lobby, they are beginning to lose their power of intimidation. These unioneers no more represent the workers than those evil fakers in the cloth represented the religious sentiment of the U. S. A. If challenged now, they will fall.

Controversy Threatens to Disrupt Plans for New Road Network

By Howard F. Wentworth
Post Staff Writer

A Federal - Arlington County controversy—friendly on the surface, but with both sides equally determined—threatens to disrupt plans for a seven million dollar network of highway serving the new War Department building across the river.

Disclosure of the dispute, centering around a property right of way, was made yesterday by Joseph Barnett, principal highway design engineer of the Public Roads Administration.

First details of the gigantic project, involving 15 miles of roads, were announced by Barnett and Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, District highway director, at a luncheon meeting of the Board of Trade highways committee at the Harrington Hotel.

Barnett reported that all plans for the undertaking had been approved by every necessary agency, except the Arlington County Board of Commissioners.

Frank C. Hanrahan, Arlington County manager, who was present, admitted the two groups were at odds, but added that all relations up to this point had been "pleasant" and the county was "not attempting to take an arbitrary position."

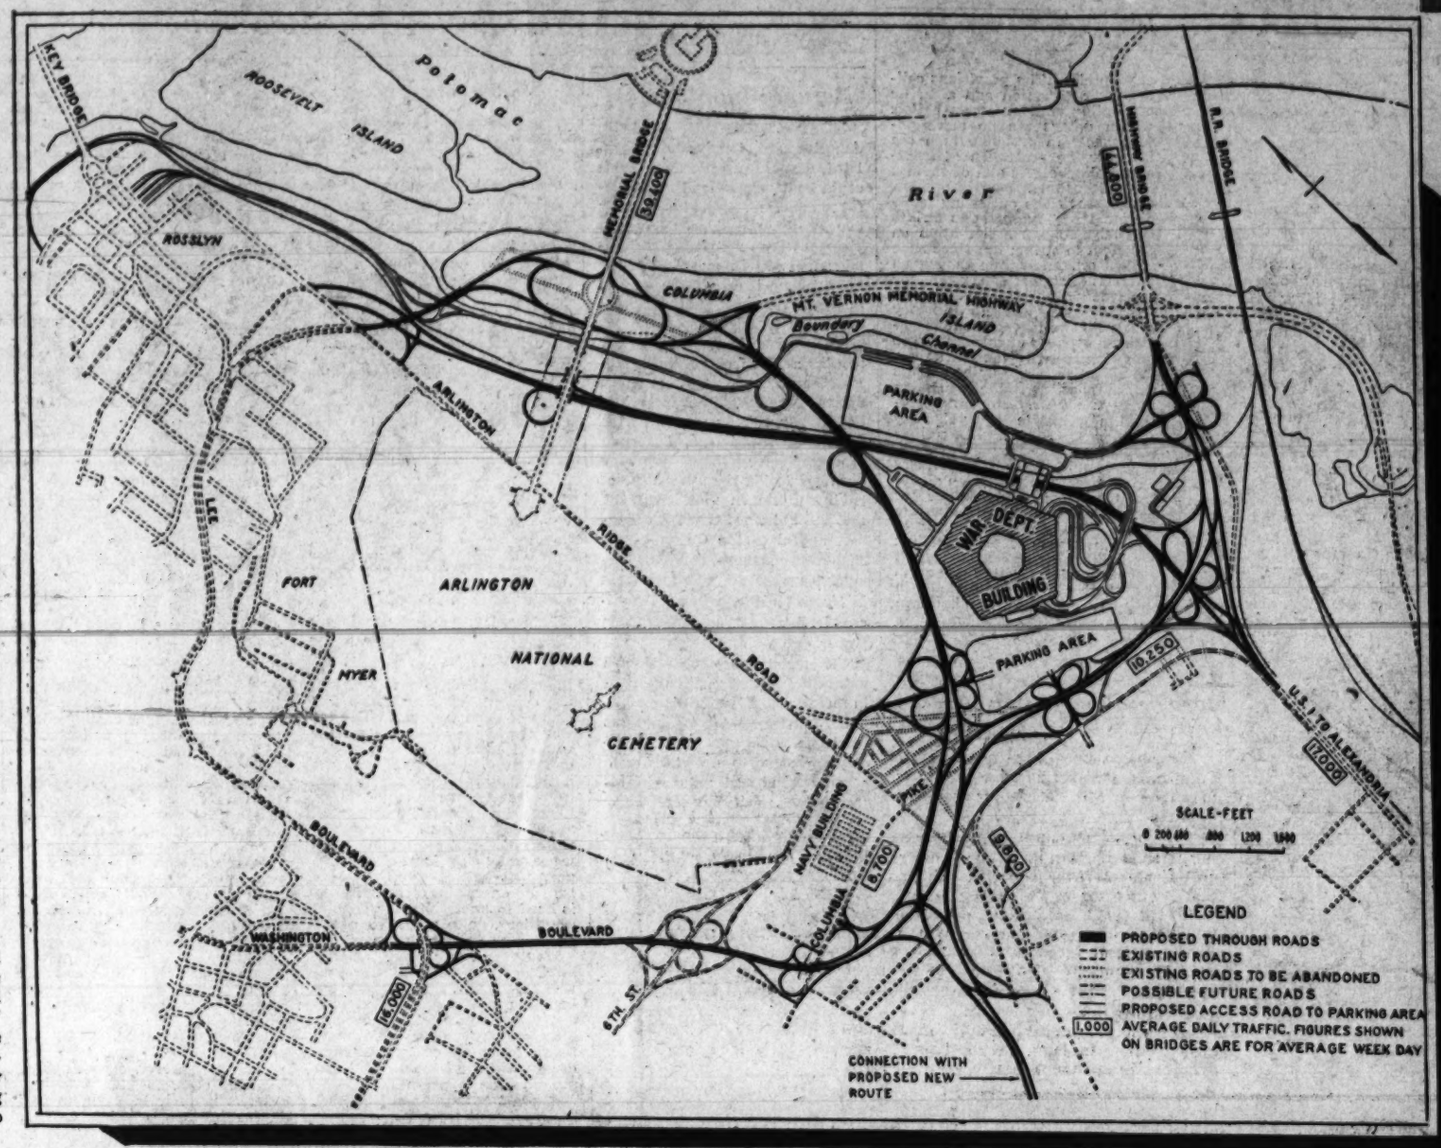
Barnett, however, said work on the intricate maze of "super" highways could "go so far and no farther" without indorsement by the county board. It was explained that the county must cooperate in closing certain roads in order to complete the job.

The disagreement involves a site at Columbia Pike and Arlington Ridge Road where it is planned to erect a large apartment-hotel, also estimated to cost seven million dollars.

Hanrahan made no bones about his desire to have the hotel and its several thousand occupants located in Arlington. But present Federal plans call for part of the new highway network—a bypass to Alexandria—to run through the hotel tract, automatically canceling its construction.

The county manager said his engineers have evolved an alternate scheme—"as good, if not better" than the Federal proposal—which would carry certain roads farther south, thus avoiding the hotel site.

This idea, however, has been turned down by the Federal officials and as a consequence, the Arlington agency has refused to add its indorsement to the present layout.



New Routes—Map locates main routes to serve the new War Department Building in Arlington, Va., and connect with existing main highways, as provided in plans made public yesterday. Prepared by the Public Roads Administration and War Department engineers, the plans include dual highways of two, three and four lanes to carry heavy traffic to and from the Capital

Hanrahan explained that the proposed new hotel would be within walking distance of both the War and Navy buildings, and "would probably mean as much to Washington as it does to us."

Completion of the huge road project is scheduled for November, 1942, with preliminary work already under way.

"We will go as far as we can," said Barnett, "and then if the county still doesn't give its approval we'll just have to quit."

The new road plan, calling for the greatest system of modernized highways yet attempted in this vicinity, was prepared by the Public Roads Administration, which is part of the Federal Works Agency, and by War Department engineers. The entire cost will be borne by the Federal Government.

Upon completion, the Virginia system will be linked with new approaches developed on this side of the Potomac by Capt. Whitehurst.

Express highways of two, three and four lanes, with traffic moving only in one direction, will provide a free and swift passage from existing bridges into Arlington and points south beyond Alexandria along No. 1 highway.

Barnett, addressing some 200 persons at yesterday's meeting, predicted a motorist would be able to go from Fourteenth Street and Independence Avenue to Falls Church in 10 minutes—"and not drive over 50 miles an hour."

There will be no signal lights nor stop signs on any of the roads, Barnett reported, and traffic will move without interruption on one-way routes with no cross-traffic interference.

He estimated that some 5000 workers are now housed in the new Navy building and an additional 20,000 will come into the area daily when the War unit is finished.

"Every device for safety and free movement of vehicles known to modern traffic engineers has been utilized," said Barnett.

It was explained that the Arlington County alternate plan has been turned down because the property in question is in direct line with Alexandria and the proposed bypass route would carry one of the heaviest volumes of traffic along the entire new network.

The necessary construction of grade separations under the alternate proposal, it was further explained, would cost more than the land involved.

Already in the network picture are plans for 19 overpasses and a maze of clover-leaf turns. Just south of the Navy building will be a three-level bridge of stone construction conforming with the architectural scheme of the metropolitan area.

A brief description of four related projects in the District was given by Capt. Whitehurst. He listed the grade separation structure at Fourteenth and Maine Avenue — now under way; the extension of Independence Avenue to Lincoln Memorial Circle; the widening and grade-separation work along Twenty-third Street to the Lincoln Memorial, and the mammoth elevated highway connecting Key Bridge with the overpass at K Street and the Rock Creek and Potomac Parkway.

The four local projects are included in the 44 million dollar Whitehurst planning survey report and total $5,950,000.

Fire Damages Flying Boat

By International News Service

Baltimore, Dec. 5.—The world's biggest flying boat, the 70-ton Glenn L. Martin Mars, was seriously damaged today while undergoing surface tests for the Navy near Middle River, Md., when a propeller blade crashed through the hull and one of the four engines burst into flames.

Company officials said there was no possibility of sabotage.

Sixteen persons aboard the giant four-motored craft escaped injury when one of the three blades of the No. 3 engine propeller wrenched loose and spun with terrific force through both sides of the immense aluminum hull.

The blade barely grazed Flight Engineer Bernie Zelubowski, who was seated at a desk before the flying boat's instrument board. Part of the instrument panel was demolished.

The accident occurred shortly after the huge airplane had left the Martin ramp and while the company's chief test pilot, William K. Ebel, was taxiing the ship along Dark Head Creek toward Middle River. Today's surface runs were to have completed the water tests for the big craft, as preliminaries to her maiden flight.

Fire broke out in the No. 3 engine room soon after the blade tore off.

As flames poured from the engine, Ebel swung the plane toward shore, beaching her close by the Stansbury Manor housing development. A company service launch which had been following the plane assisted crew members in extinguishing the fire.

Short Coiffure Aids Chic, Saves Time

This is the third of a series on defense coiffures.

By Carolyn Abbott.

A short, short (2 inches over all) hair-do that virtually takes care of itself and forms a frame for the small hats now in vogue is Mrs. A. S. Monroney's idea of an ideal defense coiffure.

Wife of an Oklahoma Congressman, petite Mrs. Monroney, is particularly fastidious about her headdress. But, busy with official and defense activities, she eschews the elaborate ones that require too much time to keep well groomed.

"In general," said Mrs. Monroney," a simple hair-do that is easy to keep and doesn't have to be dressed too often is most practical for a busy woman who must jump from one duty to another. However, it should be becoming to the individual. That, of course, precludes stereotyped adaptions of a prevailing mode."

Brushing is another secret of Mrs. Monroney's beautiful brown hair. In fact, she admitted that she spent much more time brushing than actually arranging it.

Gift for a Baby

"WHAT is a practical gift for a new baby?"

This is a particularly timely question, since, according to the bureau of vital statistics of the District Health Department, blessed events show an increase of 20 per cent this year over last. Last year December was the third most popular month for births.

The questioner in this instance is attending a miscellaneous shower for a "little" stranger. "Shall I give silver, something to wear or toys?" she asks.

From the mother of a 2-week-old baby comes the answer to this question. While she points out that usually donors of gifts wish to give something lasting, and for that reason often choose silver cups, forks, spoons, etc., these gifts are not so practical from the mother's standpoint—though it is "fun" to keep them on display.

Little wrappers are her No. 1 choice. She thinks there can never be too many of these, as a baby wears them most of the time day and night. Bath things, as sheets, blankets and the like, are also appreciated by mothers.

The season should also be taken into consideration. This time of the year babies wear sweaters. Too many sweaters are bought in small sizes which are soon outgrown. Buy a 6-month-old or even a year-old size. They should be of soft yarn, closely knit. Babies catch their fingernails in those that are loosely knit, and harsh yarns irritate the skin.

Most impractical are the dozens of fancy dresses a baby receives. Often fabrics are not washable or soft enough. The simplest little soft cotton dresses are preferred. Just as soon as possible the mother puts her boy into little knitted rompers, so it is wisest to save dresses for a girl's gift.

More toys might also be given as gifts—those that are rubber or washable leatherette. Since mothers seldom make it a point of buying toys with so many necessities needed, they are especially appreciated.

Men's Queries

FROM two young men in business come the following questions on men's attire. The one wants to know whether a double or single-breasted suit is more appropriate at night. He also asks if one is considered more dressy than the other for wear in the evening when the men "don't dress" but the women do.

There is no specific rule in this matter. In most cases, it is merely a matter of preference. A man can appear just as well dressed in a three-button single-breasted suit as he can in a double-breasted. It is all in knowing how.

It would seem, however, that among young men Government workers there is a preference for the single-breasted suit. One store says that it sells 75 per cent more of single than double-breasted styles. This is attributed to the fact that many young men do not want to be bothered with the double-breasted type because they always have to keep the coat buttoned.

Regardless of the time of day, the double-breasted suit is always considered more dressy than the single-breasted, according to the consensus of men's clothing buyers. Many businessmen prefer the single-breasted styles for day as they feel they look more snappy in them. Men who want to appear even more formal buy an Oxford gray double-breasted suit and wear the coat for evening with dark striped trousers.

In the opinion of men's store buyers, just above the shoe top is too short for any fellow to wear his trousers. They do not even wear them that short in the colleges, where "eds" dress extremely high style. Really short sport trousers are seldom shorter than just touching the shoe top. The average fellow will wear his tweeds so that the trousers just touch the front part of the shoe. men usually wear theirs slightly longer, with a bit of a break.

Fig Meringue Pie Wins Prize in Post Contest

A fig meringue pie made from dried figs wins a $1 prize for Mrs. Mary G. Ireland, 9627 Lawndale Drive, Silver Spring, Md. The following is her winning recipe:

Fig Meringue Pie—Add to 2 cups stewed dried figs, ½ cup sugar, 1 tablespoon flour, juice and rind of ½ lemon. Beat 3 egg yolks light, combine with the first mixture. Pour into a plate lined with pastry. Bake in hot oven, 375 degrees until firm in the center, about 30 minutes. Cover with a meringue made by beating the 3 egg whites stiff with 3 tablespoons powdered sugar. Finish baking in slow oven, 300 degrees, allowing about 12 minutes.

Rita Hayworth Does Not Diet; Stays Thin by Dancing, Sports

By Ida Jean Kain

Hollywood's new darling, Rita Hayworth, does a thoroughgoing job of upsetting all the pat streamline standards. She weighs only a slight 118 pounds for her height of five six—and yet she hasn't an angle!

It's a wonder she isn't a thin girl, but it's a matter of pictorial record that she is nothing of the kind. Here are her actual measurements: Bust, 35 inches; waist, 25 inches; hips, 35 inches; calf, 13 inches; ankle, 7⅛ inches; wrist, 5¾ inches.

If she conformed to the "rule of the wrist" established a few years back for film figures, the line-up would be: Waist, 4½ times the wrist measurement; hips, six times that of the wrist; chest, measured above the bust, 5½ times; thigh, 3½ times; calf, 2¼ times; ankle, 1½ times the wrist. Her figure is better than that.

I had always suspected this rule might be a trifle on the lean and hungry side, and Rita's figure certainly seems to prove it. She loves food and never diets—she doesn't have to. She eats sensibly. She has three regular meals a day, drinks plenty of milk, eats fruits, vegetables, meat, cheese, and eggs, all of which make for high vitality and glamor, and leaves off the rich pastries and desserts which only make fat.

Rita's entire mode of living is one that makes for good looks. As you've probbaly gathered, she dances enough to get all the exercise she actually needs. But she likes variety. She plays ping-pong, bowls, plays tennis, shoots golf in the low 80's, and swims. Instead of splashing around in a quiet pool, she likes to reach out into the Pacific for distance.

RITA HAYWORTH

The rest of her beauty program consists in similar simple but sensible measures. She brushes her strawberry blonde hair for three minutes by the clock every day and believes in washing her face often and thoroughly with first warm, then cold water. As a dancer, she is foot conscious and massages her feet every day. And there's a real beauty tip, for foot trouble invariably adds crowsfeet.

Woman Asks How to Protect Best Friend Against Cantankerous Sister-in-Law, a Devious Hypocrite Whose Chief Occupation in Life Is Trouble-Making

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Do you have any suggestions on how to "muffle" a cantankerous sister-in-law? She isn't my "in-law," thank heaven. She happens to be my best friend's "problem." My friend has been ill for some time and is convalescing satisfactorily,—except for occasional upsets brought on by this devious hypocrite's thrusts at her.

I have been so concerned over the situation that I consulted my lawyer about it, giving him all the irksome details. He is of the opinion that we are dealing with a crazy woman. He says no one person could be so heartless. My friend's reaction to the woman is not "in-law prejudice." I have had some unpleasant first-hand dealings with her. For instance: After praising my friend to me extravagantly, in order to gain my confidence, she thereupon tried to poison my mind against her.

Can't something be done to "quarantine" a person whose chief occupation and purpose in life is to cause trouble for others? How can one insulate his feelings and affairs against such malevolence? Your comment will be greatly appreciated. Sincerely. I. F. M.

Kindly Indifference Stalemates Busybody

DEAR I. F. M.: Your friend's sister-in-law seems to be a run-of-mine busybody, whose unholy delight in making trouble for others reflects—as such conduct usually does—deep dissatisfaction with her own lot in life; or, to say it another way, emotional and social frustration of one kind or another. You have heard the saying, "Misery loves company." This would explain her efforts to inject the baccilli of wretchedness into the souls of those whose lives adjoin hers. Or one might say that she is allergic to happy people in her environment—and breaks out in a rash of spiteful reactions when breathing the atmosphere of their contentment: a rash that she tries to gloss over with purring hypocrisy.

She is not "crazy," in the sense of being insane; but she is certainly sick minded, in a neurotically ailing way. When you see someone whose chief occupation in life is tale bearing and trouble making, you see a person suffering from a deep inferiority feeling,—who is trying to build himself up by tearing others down (trying to prove, in effect, that none is more admirable than he, when all's said and done); and at the same time, expressing a hostile reaction to the world in general, in terms of personal animosities.

Busybodies cannot truly be called "heartless." Actually, they are not unfeeling. On the contrary, they are potentially capable of intense attachments and ardent sympathies. The diligent tenacity they bring to their "dirty work" gives proof of their emotional vigor. But unfortunately for themselves and their associates, they have never learned how to integrate their feelings, thoughts, actions and speech to a constructive, affirmative, socially cooperative pattern of expression.

They are "at sixes and sevens" with themselves, as with certain other people. (Indeed, as the apt term has it, they are invariably "their own worst enemy.") They are subjectively discordant personalities, when they could,—by redirecting their energies,—be at peace with themselves and others. Hateful, envious and fearsome emotions gnaw at their vitals, —pouring poison into their thoughts. In consequence, they see the world through jaundiced eyes,—and what they behold seems distasteful to them. They miss the clean, true colors of much that is under their scrutiny.

And so with your best friend's "malevolent" sister-in-law. To glimpse, even in the sketchiest way, some implication of what her conduct "is all about," is to realize that she "knows not what she does." It is to see that detached compassion, and the determination to blandly ignore and make charitable allowance for the spiteful things she says and does, are the healthiest reactions to take toward her.

Really enlightened adult minds would automatically adopt this attitude toward her,—and in so doing, would automatically disarm her of power to spoil their lives or hurt their feelings. As someone has said, "No one can hurt your feelings, unless you concede him the power to do so." And as a certain child of my close acquaintance casually remarks, when someone has behaved rudely or spitefully toward her, "I guess So-and-So isn't feeling very well today."

My advice to you is to project much the same attitude toward the woman in question. By refusing to "take her seriously," and by persuading your friend to do the same, you will be placing her under most effective "quarantine," so far as attempted interference in your respective lives and amiable relationship is concerned. It is a mistake to get agitated over her devious hypocrisy. And it would be equally a mistake to try to contrive means of "settling the score." One can't touch pitch without being defiled; and neither can one cross swords with such a person without discovering that one has descended to his somewhat irrational level of exchange.

M. H.

Nice Manners Attract Beaux

SUCH A lucky young girl, to be chosen for glamour dates!

Perhaps, though, her luck lies in her charming, glamorous manners—in knowing the little things other girls neglect to learn.

After stepping out of the taxi, she walks toward the hotel entrance while her beau pays the cab bill. She doesn't hang about, embarrassing him as a less poised girl would do.

In the rrestaurant the well-bred girl never asks questions nor gives orders to the waiter; her beau does that for her. If soup's served, she doesn't crumble crackers into it. And she drirnks from the side, not the tip of the spoon.

A man's proud to introrduce her to his friends, so of courrse she meets more people and goes more places than other girls do.

At a dance, if a man says, "I'm glad to have met you," she doesn't reply with a cheap "it's mutual, I'm sure," but says smilingly, "Thank you." With a foursome at the theater she knows the men sit on the outside, the girls in the middle.

Army Uniforms of Varied Nations Mingle At Mileses' Colorful Reception at War College

Gay Music, Heaps of Tempting Viands Feature Delightful Afternoon Affair

By Elizabeth Henney

The midnight blue of the full-dress United States Army uniform, the gray-blue of the Brazilian army and the varied colorful uniforms of several other countries almost outshone the brilliant plumage of the feminine guests yesterday afternoon at the reception given by Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Sherman Miles in the Army War College Club in honor of Gen. Newton Cavalcanti, of the Brazilian army.

Gen. and Mrs. Miles and their honor guest received at the entrance of the ballroom on the second floor of the colonial brick structure that overlooks the quiet Potomac. Mrs. Miles, who was gowned in flowing black floor-length chiffon, fashioned with a black lace bodice, wore a corsage of tawny orchids.

All during the afternoon an orchestra played gaily and toward evening, as the crowd thinned, several couples swung out onto the dance floor. At the far end of the ballroom was a long tea table, on which were two large silver vases of pink roses, matching snapdragons and baby's breath, flanked by several tall ivory tapers in silver holders. The table itself was an epicurean's delight of varied viands. Smithfield hams, heaping platters of turkey, a special shrimp bowl, tiny cucumber sandwiches and many other tempting dishes combined to make it a most popular spot, and at either end of the table assistants officiated at great tea and coffee urns.

Cheese and Caviar Have Special Table

The cheese lovers foregathered at a small table in the corner, where they found an infinite variety of cheeses, ranging from sherry-softened edam to roquefort, and even a large cream cheese boatload of caviar (the Army War College Club being one of the few places beside the Soviet Embassy still able to serve that rarity).

At the cheese table Mrs. Richard Casey, wife of the Australian Minister, and Miss Pat Jarrett, press representative of the legation, held a small court for their many friends and held earnest discussions on cheeses, a favorite subject with Mrs. Casey, who is conducting a campaign through the markets of Washington to find her special fancy, Wyoming blue cheese.

Another popular spot, across the room from the orchestra stand, was the liquid refreshment table, where everything a guest could wish for was being served, from fruit and tomato juices to Scotch and ——.

Pouring tea during the afternoon were Mme. Martine, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador; Mme. Stenio Lima, wife of the Brazilian Assistant Military Attache; Mme. Ararigboia, wife of the Brazilian Air Attache, and Mme. Kondor, wife of the Counselor of the Brazilian Embassy.

Officiating at the coffee urn were Mrs. Hays Kroner, Mrs. R. S. Bratton, Mrs. H. E. Maguire and Mrs. F. J. De Rohan, while generally assisting were Mrs. Ralph G. Smith, Mrs. J. T. B. Bissell, Mrs. C. Y. Banfill and Mrs. W. P. Vordeman.

High Ranking Officers Noted Among Guests

Among the early arrivals were the former Deputy Chief of Staff, Gen. Stanley D. Embick, the former Superintendent of West Point, Maj. Gen. W. D. Connor and Mrs. Connor, who was gowned in black with touches of turquoise; Mrs. Walter R. Tuckerman, who was accompanied by her daughter, Miss Ruth Tuckerman and her house guest, Mme. Groultch, the latter in black with an interesting strand of Bohemian beads, and Mrs. Ann Archbold, whose gown of Kelly green was matched by her felt sport hat.

Being greeted on all sides by their many friends were Mrs. Robert M. Danford, wife of Maj. General Danford, the Chief of Field Artillery, and her daughter, Mrs. James Wells, who is in town while her husband, Capt. Wells, is on maneuvers. Gen. Danford, who is on the West Coast, is expected back in town sometime next week.

Sen. and Mrs. Reynolds Create a Flurry

Another center of attention were Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Alexander Day Surles, the former the new Chief of the Army Press Section. Mrs. Surles, who was all in black, accented her velvet gown with a pearl necklace which matched her earbobs.

Creating quite a flurry were Senator and Mrs. "Bob" Reynolds, who arrived for a brief stay quite late in the afternoon for their first public appearance since their marriage here at the McLean estate, Friendship, sometime ago. The former Evalyn Washington McLean, who had topped her black frock with a long mink cape, was explaining to friends that she and the Senator are just convalescing from "flu," which they caught at Palm Beach, Fla.

Still others noted during the afternoon were the Minister of Luxembourg and Mme. La Gallais, the latter wearing a long silver fox cape over her simple black frock; the Naval Attache of the British Embassy, Rear Admiral H. Pott, and Mrs. Pott; Miss Mary Randolph, Mrs. Edgar Jadwin; then Inspector General of the Army, Maj. Gen. Virgil L. Peterson, and Mrs. Peterson; Mrs. Edward R. Finkenstaedt; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Grant Meem; Maj. and Mrs. Sherlock Davis, the latter in a taupe velvet suit and matching hat; Mrs. Frederick Brooke, and hundreds more.

MISS ELBERT MONCURE GOODWIN, whose parents, the Right Rev. and Mrs. Frederick Deane Goodwin, have announced her engagement to the Rev. Peyton Randolph Williams, rector of Christ Church in Georgetown. The prospective bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Lewis C. Williams, of Richmond, Va. No date has been set for the wedding

Edisons Coming Here for Visit

Gov. and Mrs. Charles Edison, of New Jersey, will arrive in Washington today to visit Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert for the weekend. This evening they will be feted at a dinner to be given by Rear Admiral and Mrs. George Pettengill, and tomorrow evening Mrs. Robert will entertain at a buffet supper in their honor.

Coming to the Capital yesterday for a visit with Mr. and Mrs. Robert were Mrs. Esther Gries, of Chicago, and Edward Maddon, of New York.

Last evening all three were among the guests at the dinner given by Mrs. Robert. Others there were Lieut. Commander and Mrs. Lawrence Snell, Mr. and Mrs. William Boyer, Mrs. A. Mitchell Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Waldrop, Mrs. Eugene Carusi, Grant Mason and Thomas L. Johnson.

De Bettencourts Visit First Lady, Leave for New York

Changing their minds once again—M. and Mme. de Bettencourts, the two Brazilian journalists who have been whirled about Washington this week, left for New York yesterday shortly after lunching at the White House as guests of Mrs. Roosevelt. The de Bettencourts, however, expect to return to Washington sometime next week.

Later yesterday afternoon Mrs. Roosevelt received the "coffee queens," a group of young Latin-American girls who are here on a good-will tour. They were guests at tea at the White House.

Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador, who has been feting the de Bettencourts, also went yesterday to New York, where she will be for a week.

Dinners Precede Year's First Friday Evening Club Dance

Before going to the opening dance of the seventeenth consecutive season of the Friday Evening Dancing Club in the Willard Ballroom, a number of Washingtonians entertained at dinners last night. Among the hosts were Maj. and Mrs. Parker West, Sidney Taliferro, Miss Cornelia Bowie, Dr. and Mrs. George Calver and Mrs. Irene Caldwell.

Miss Cornelia Bowie, who invited 65 guests to her home on Twentieth Street, feted Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Randall, of Philadelphia, who are her house guests over the weekend and Commander and Mrs. Leslie Jacobs. Among the guests who came from out of town for the party were Mr. and Mrs. Page Bowie, of Annapolis, Md.; Judge and Mrs. Charles Marbury, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Smith and Mr. and Mrs. William Brooke, all of Princes Georges County, Md.

The Parker West dinner was in honor of the new members of the committee who organize the annual series of six dances. Covers were laid for 40 in the Wests' apartment at 2101 Connecticut Avenue.

Dr. and Mrs. George Calver's dinner was served buffet style in their Cathedral Avenue apartment. Guests were Rear Admiral and Mrs. Charles Riggs, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Lee Colbert, Dr. and Mrs. Roy Lyman Sexton, Commander and Mrs. James Glennon, Judge and Mrs. Ernest Van Fossan, Mr. and Mrs. James Armstrong and Dr. and Mrs. Howard F. Strine.

Among the group that gathered at Mrs. Caldwell's home in Wesley Heights for buffet supper were Representative and Mrs. Estes Kefauver, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Holland Duell, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sherrod, Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Waltman, Mr. and Mrs. I. B. Kirkland, jr., Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Hatch, Mr. and Mrs. Lacy Reynolds, Pierpont Davis, John O'Leary, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Cafritz and Miss Blanche Day.

Members of the Friday Evening Dancing Club committee include Mrs. Ralph Brewster, Mrs. Parker West, Mrs. Charles Riggs, Mrs. George Calver, Mrs. Emil Hurja, Mrs. Bruce Smith, Mrs. Frank Wideman, Mrs. Harold Brooks and Mrs. John McClure.

Monroneys Plan Oklahoma Trip

It doesn't exactly seem like going "home" any more when you've only spent two months there in the last three years, but Representative and Mrs. Mike Monroney will call it that anyway when they leave for Oklahoma City, Okla., the end of next week.

Tonight they are giving another in their series of small dinners, and will resume them again when they return January 4. Mrs. Monroney is making her plans already for the trip and may leave the end of the week, or again she may decide to wait and leave Sunday with Representative Monroney, who is planning to attend the Gridiron dinner Saturday.

Pauline Fenno Is Honored at Dusk Gathering

Gathering in a few friends at her Georgetown home, Mrs. Arthur Woods entertained yesterday after 5:30 o'clock in honor of Miss Pauline Fenno.

Miss Fenno, who is in Washington only for several days, has been in Boston visiting her mother, Mrs. L. C. Fenno. Now making her home in England, Miss Fenno is assistant to Lady Reading, chairman of the Women's Voluntary Services for Civil Defense, with headquarters in London.

Embassy Day Fete Scheduled Today

Lady Halifax, wife of the British Ambassador, will be ranking guest at the "Embassy Day" luncheon-broadcast today at Hotel 2400. Also at the head table, where Miss Meredith Howard will preside as "Minister of Good Will," are expected to be Senator Theodore Francis Green of Rhode Island, and Maj. Gen. Allan Gullion, Mrs. Walter P. Lippmann and Mr. and Mrs. Warren Lee Pierson are also planning to attend. Part of the funds will go to the Red Cross.

From the British Embassy will be the First Secretary, John Foster, and Attache William Emslie. Others at the table will be Charles Peake, Mrs. James Holman, Baroness Stackelberg and Jack Seegar.

Among those who have taken tables for their guests are Miss Henrietta Sherwood, Mrs. Hunter Wheeler of Pasadena, Calif., Baroness Rosenberg, Mrs. J. J. Hooper and Mrs. Horace Shears. Miss Rena Cournan expects to have as her guest Miss Gloria Vanderbilt of New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert LeBaron will entertain at the luncheon today, and will have at their table Commander and Mrs. Fred Storm, Capt. and Mrs. E. R. Henning, Mr. and Mrs. Allen Moulton, Neitah King and Maj. John O'Brien.

Mrs. Roosevelt Is 'Open Road' Dinner Hostess

Mrs. Roosevelt was hostess at a dinner party given at the White House last night for members of the Open Road Organization, started some years ago to stimulate travel. They arrange to send college students to foreign lands.

Barrys to Hold Dinner Before Dance Friday

Maj. and Mrs. David Barry and their daughter, Miss Alice Barry, will entertain at a dinner party on Friday, December 12, at the 1925 F Street Club, before the supper club dance at the Sulgrave.

Sharing honors at the party will be two recently wed couples, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Neele and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sterrett. The former Jane Acheson and her husband, Dudley Bradstreet Illiams Brown, were also to have been honor guests but the Browns are now stationed in Key West, Fla., where he is serving with the Navy. However, they plan to be here for Christmas with her parents, the Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean Acheson. Miss Alice Barry was bridesmaid at the recent weddings of the young couples.

The dance for the "quite young" that Maj. and Mrs. Barry planned in honor of their daughter, Miss Frances Barry, has been changed to a tea dance on December 23 and is to be given at the F Street club. Miss Barry, who is a student at the Holmquist School, at New Hope, Pa., will arrive home for the holidays on December 18.

Miss Stirling's Debut Set for Dec. 25

Invitations have been issued by Dr. and Mrs. William Calhoun Stirling to the debut of their daughter, Miss Margheritta Stirling, Christmas Day. The party, a 4-to-7 tea, will take place at the Larz Anderson House.

Miss Stirling, who will also make her bow at the fashionable St. Cecilia Ball in Charleston, S. C., January 8, will be the guest there of her uncle, Lieut. Comdr. Edwin H. Tillman, and Mrs. Tillman. Now a student at George Washington University—she attended Sarah Lawrence College last year—she is devoting her academic time to art and physics.

Senora de Espil's Tea Party Provides Pleasant Interlude

Pleasant interlude in a hectic round of parties yesterday afternoon was the tea given by Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador. From 4:30 to 6 o'clock a distinguished group of women from the Diplomatic Corps and official society were on hand to enjoy the informal fete. Incidentally, like a number of other events on yesterday's calendar, the party was "one in a series."

Receiving at the door of the dining room the hostess wore a street length, black faille frock styled with a fitted bodice and finished off with crystal trimmed buttons. A bouquet of Easter lillies ("to match the mild Easter weather," somebody said) centered the tea table, which was lighted with two tall clusters of tapers in silver candelabra.

Assisting Senora de Espil were her daughter, Mrs. Randall Hagner, jr., and Mrs. Frank Letts, whose becoming black ensemble was accented with a double strand of pearls. Others who took turns at pouring tea or coffee were ladies of the Argentine Embassy, including Senora de Pardo, wife of the First Secretary; Senora de Brunet, wife of the Naval and Air Attache; Senora de Parodo, wife of the Military Attache; Senora de Scilingo, wife of the Air Attache; Senora de Poladino, wife of the Second Secretary, and Senora de Solon, wife of the Agricultural Attache.

Just back from a brief vacation in North Carolina, Mrs. Cordell Hull was among those attending the party. Her brown frock was worn with a matching hat and set off with a sable jacket. Mrs. Henry A. Wallace arrived with Mme. Bruggmann. Among those coming in for the first half of the party were Mrs. William O. Douglas, Mrs. Frank Walker and Mrs. Claude Wickard.

Mrs. Stanley Reed chatted with Mrs. Robert H. Jackson and Mrs. James M. Helm. Mme. Fotitch said over the teacups that the current Yugoslav bazaar had drawn hundreds of Christmas buyers. Mrs. George Maurice Morris and Mrs. Hiram Bingham discussed ways and means of finding the shortest way from the Argentine Embassy to the Army War College, where Gen. and Mrs. Sherman Miles were entertaining. Mrs. Gilbert Hitchcock stepped in for a cup of tea and was accompanied by her house guest, Mrs. Frank Crump, of Memphis, Tenn.

Countess Palffy, who wore a pink carnation in one lapel pocket and a red carnation in the other, to match her hat and scarf, talked at length with Mrs. Grenville Emmet. Smartly turned out in an all-black ensemble was Mrs. Albert Dewey.

Still others seen there were Countess Van der Straten-Ponthoz, Mme. Loudoun, Mme. Hurban, accompanied by Mme. Cervanka; Mrs. John Cabot, Mme. Procope, Mrs. Richard McCreery, Mrs. Barnet Nover, Mrs. Clarence Norton Goodwin and many others.

Miss Ramby Wed To George Brown

A double-ring ceremony last evening marked the marriage of Miss Catherine Mildred Ramby, daughter of Mrs. Elsie Pote Ramby, of Washington, to George William Brown, son of Mr. and Mrs. Roy S. Brown, also of this city. The Rev. Enoch M. Thompson read the vows at the Nativity Episcopal Church, and Miss Bertie Mae Pote was at the organ.

The bride was given in marriage by her father, Charles W. Ramby, of Silver Hill, Md. Her white satin gown was cut on princess lines and featured a full-length veil with pearl headdress. She carried an arm bouquet of gardenias.

Miss Evelyn Brown, sister of the bridegroom, wore a white taffeta dress trimmed with white tulle and wine velvet. Her accessories were gold, and she carried roses. Other attendants were Mrs. Catherine Pote, Miss Margaret Dennison, Miss Josephine Pratehr and Miss Eleanor Pletzer. Mary Ann Ramby, who was her sister's flower girl, wore pink taffeta.

Joseph Roberts was best man, and ushers were Robert Cordell, Sam Watson, Marvin Taylor, Bert Bowman and George Seymour. Newman Whitmyer, nephew of the bridegroom, was ring bearer. Following the ceremony there was a reception at Mrs. Ramby's home.

When the couple left on their trip through the Shenandoah Valley, the bride was wearing a black two-piece crepe dress with green accessories and gardenia corsage. They will make their home in Washington when they return. Mrs. Brown attended Lankenau School for Girls in Philadelphia.

Admiral Rockwell's Wife Will Make Home Here

Mrs. Frank W. Rockwell, wife of Rear Admiral Rockwell, has returned to Washington to make her home while her husband is stationed at Cavite, Philippine Islands.

With Mrs. Rockwell are her two daughters, Mrs. Melvin W. Woods and Miss Kappy Rockwell, and her cousin, Miss Katharine Fergusson. They have recently come from Newport, R. I., and have taken a house, 3245 Cleveland Avenue.

Mrs. Rockwell is not new to the Capital, having lived here while her husband served two tours of duty. She has been away from Washington about three years.

Miss Hagner Is Entertained

Miss Isabella Hagner, debutante daughter of Mrs. Randall Hagner, was the guest in whose honor Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, entertained at luncheon yesterday at the Argentine Embassy.

Others there were Mrs. Randall Hagner, jr., daughter of the hostess; Miss Elaine Darlington, Miss Ruth Hurley, Miss Mildred Dunn, Miss Joan Dodd, Miss Sita Finkenstaedt, Miss Elizabeth Van der Straten-Ponthoz, Miss Catherine Hill, Miss Elizabeth Stewart-Richardson and Mrs. Lloyd Symington.

Later, Miss Hagner assisted at the "after 5" party given by her mother. The event was one in a series that Mrs. Hagner has planned for this season.

Elisabeth Orr Becomes Bride Of C. J. Johnson, Jr.

Miss Elisabeth Ann Orr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Orr, of Arlington, Va., was given by her father in marriage yesterday afternoon to Charles J. A. Johnson, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson, of Arlington. The Rev. W. E. Basom and the Rev. H J. Miller officiated for the 5 o'clock ceremony at the Arlington Beverly Hills Church.

The bride was attired in a two-piece sea foam green dress with brown-gold accessories and wore a corsage of orchids. Edward Johnson was best man, and ushers were Benjamin Oliver and Donald Orr, brother of the bride. Mrs. Orr was gowned in teal blue trimmed with silver. Her accessories were black, and she wore a corsage of pink camellias. Iceberg blue made the gown of Mrs. Johnson, mother of the bridegroom, who wore tea roses.

Mrs. Copeland Greets Friends At Grosners'

Washington friends of Mrs. Royal S. Copeland, widow of the Senator from New York, dropped in between 5 and 7 to greet her at the party which Mr. and Mrs. Clarence W. Grosner gave in her honor yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Copeland, who is staying with the Grosners at their home in Massachusetts Park, stood in the living room, decorated with pink snapdragons, to receive with her hostess. Her floor-length frock of black crepe was set off with a pearl-embroidered gold yolk and a corsage of gardenias. Mrs. Grosner pinned an orchid corsage to the shoulder of her beige chiffon dress, which was accented by a beaded bodice.

Assisting at the tea table, which was centered with red roses and ivory candles in silver candlesticks, were Senora de De Bayle, Mrs. Claude Pepper, Senora de Baron, Mrs. Lawrence Arnold, Mrs. Leo Brison Norris, Mrs. M. Robert Guggenheim, Mrs. Wilber Z. Gordon, Mrs. George Boncesco, Mrs. Harold Duane Jacobs and the Misses Marian and Marie Theresa Norris.

Secretary Morgenthau Arrives Early

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., who dropped in for a few moments, was one of the first to arrive at the party. Anis Azar, Commercial Counselor of the Egyptian Legation, was on his way to Mrs. Enid Snow's "drop-in" affair. Mrs. Lawrence Arnold, in a chic white feathered hat, told Mrs. Thomas C. Dawson, who was wearing a blue ensemble, that she expected her son, Lawrence, jr., home from his roving FBI assignment by Christmas. Mrs. Kenneth Watson was planning to meet her husband at Mrs. Randall Hagner's "at home" later in the afternoon; and Senora de Munilla chatted of this and that with Mrs. Leo Brison Norris, who wore a corsage of gardenias on her white lace-trimmed black dinner frock.

Diplomatic Set Is Represented

Among those from the diplomatic set were the Minister of Nicaragua and Senora de De Bayle, Sir Owen and Lady Chalkley, and the Egyptian Minister and Mme. Hassan. M. Hassan had to leave early in order to make a radio broadcast.

Col. E. C. Stockdale chatted with Commander and Mrs. Gardner Luce and Miss Joan Carter. Still others there were Brig. Gen. and Mrs. L. H. Campbell and their daughter, Miss Virginia Campbell; M. and Mme. Sokolowska, Mrs. Carl Droop, Dr. and Mrs. Matthew White Perry, Mrs. Earl M. Mackintosh and Dr. and Mrs. C. H. McEnerny.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

Mme. Procope, wife of the Minister of Finland, was hostess yesterday at a small luncheon, which was one in a series she is giving this season.

Mrs. Ellen Woodward entertained at an informal dinner in her apartment at the Westchester last night.

Miss Cynthia Dunn, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, left yesterday for Boca Grande, Fla., to visit her sister, Marianna, the Countess de Baillet Latour. Later the sisters will be joined by Mr. and Mrs. Dunn, who hope to leave Washington about December 21 to spend the holiday in a warmer clime.

Col. Burdette Fitch will give an "after five" party Monday afternoon in his apartment at 2000 Connecticut Avenue.

Mrs. McKeldin Thorne will be "at home" Sunday afternoon between 5 and 7 o'clock.

Women Asked to Suggest Penny Milk Programs

Encouragement of penny milk programs for school children was named as one of the ways in which organizations can cooperate in consumer problems, by Mrs. A. Louise Gilbert of the consumers' counsel division, Department of Agriculture, at the civic section meeting of the Woman's Club of Chevy Chase, Md., yesterday.

Support of consumer information centers was cited as another step for groups' cooperation. Mrs. Gilbert pointed out that the movement for such centers is "coming to the fore," and told of plans for setting up a center in the District.

Individuals can lend support to the simplification program, to reduce the number of colors and styles of consumer goods, such as fabrics and shoes, Mrs. Gilbert said. Such a program, she explained, would mean "that a greater volume of goods can be made with the machinery we already have."

She spoke on "New Aspects of Consumer Problems" at the meeting at the clubhouse, with Mrs. James V. Bennett, assistant chairman of the section, presiding.

Among other steps which she cited for individual consumers were: To try to improve the diet of their families; to discard habits of reckless and unsystematic buying and to plan wise buying; to eliminate waste, and to seek the improvement of sanitary handling of food in stores.

Organized groups, she said, can work for weights and measures legislation, for the extension of standards of quality for consumer goods; can study rents and housing shortages, and can study prices.

Mrs. Reyton Whalen, director of the women's division of the Montgomery County Defense Council, outlined its activities.

Mrs. Frank C. Kracek proposed that members of the club make provisions for entertaining service men at parties and in their homes. The matter was referred to the executive board.

Classes in auto mechanics, nutrition, typing and speech will be organized in January, if enrollment warrants, Mrs. Bennett announced in connectio nwith the club's defense program.

To Speak on Civil Liberties

"Civil Liberties and Defense" will be discussed by Charles P. Taft, assistant director, office of defense, health and welfare services, at a membership meeting of the Voteless District League of Women Voters at noon December 19 at the Y. W. C. A., it was announced yesterday.

Mrs. Harold Stone, chairman of the league's department of Government and its operation, made the announcement yesterday afternoon at a departmental meeting on "Civil Liberties" at league headquarters.

The membership meeting was timed for the week in which the anniversary of the Bill of Rights will be observed nationally. In line with the league's plan to have one membership meeting a month on one theme, civil liberties was chosen as the keynote for the December program.

The league's social welfare department, of which Mrs. H. P. Chandler is chairman, yesterday held a meeting at the public assistance division of the board of public welfare, to discuss its operation with staff members.

Camp Facilities For Play Few, Inquiry Finds

Copyright by New York Times.

The "almost complete lack" of recreational facilities at Army camps came in for criticism yesterday from the Senate Defense Investigating Committee as it heard Brig. Gen. Frederick H. Osborn, Army morale officer, answer questions on what his department is doing to maintain Army morale.

In a committee report read into the record by Senator Mead numerous examples were given of shortages of recreational facilities which, the Senator said, forced the trainees to get their camp recreation "tossing a baseball around out back of the barracks."

At Camp Blanding in Florida, he said, where 50,000 men are training, there were no basketball or handball courts, no football fields, no gymnasium, but three tennis courts. However, the report showed, the camp did have 25 chapels.

Pine Camp in northern New York, possessed 13 basketballs, 15 baseballs and 51 baseball bats but had neither baseball fields nor basketball courts, the Senator added.

"When I was up there," he continued, "the boys were playing baseball in a place where the third baseman couldn't see home plate on account of the dust."

Gen. Osborn admitted that the idea of providing recreational facilities for the selectees apparently had not been given much attention in plans for the camps, but added that progress was being made. Last summer, he said, the Red Cross gave the Army one million dollars for recreational materials, such as baseballs, footballs and basketballs, places in which to use them were now being provided where practicable, he added, along with field houses and other recreational facilities.

Other subjects inquired into by the committee were alleged discrimination by commercial establishments against men in uniform, provisions for the education of selectees who have had to abandon their school or college courses or who want learning of some kind, and the handling of the prostitution problem near Army camps.

On the matter of discrimination, Col. N. M. Montgomery, an assistant of Gen. Osborn, said that the morale agency had investigated numerous complaints but so far had found only one with any color of validity.

Labor Faces Curbs, Arnold Tells N.A.M.

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 5.—Thurman W. Arnold, Assistant Attorney General of the United States declared tonight there should be "penalties by law on those shortsighted labor leaders who are foolish enough to use their power for purposes which have nothing to do with the legitimate aims of labor."

This declaration was contained in a speech he prepared for delivery to more than 3000 industrialists in the annual banquet with which the National Association of Manufacturers brought to a close its forty-sixth Congress of American Industry.

Arnold addressed a convention which, in previous sessions, had unanimously called on Congress to ban strikes against the defense program.

Says Business Needs Protection

Although the Assistant Attorney General's speech was, in the main, extemporaneous, the following highlights of his talk were written by him in advance:

"Our present labor difficulties present not one problem but two. The first is the necessary insurance that our defense program shall not be tied up by the failure of mediation in labor disputes.

"The second is the indispensable protection which independent businessmen and consumers need against extortion in a time of rising prices.

"This second problem is being forgotten today. Independent businessmen are being compelled to hire labor they do not need. They are stopped from giving consumers the benefit of more efficient methods or better materials. They are crushed in battles between rival labor unions in which they have no interest nor even any influence.

"Consumers, because of the illegitimate practices of labor unions, strategically located in transportation or distribution of interests, are being forced to pay a tribute estimated by some economists to be more than a billion dollars a year.

"Labor conspiracies in many large cities are preventing consumers from having cheaper houses, cheaper transportation and cheaper distribution of the interests of life.

Parasites Not Wanted

"The United States has decided that it wants high wages, short hours and good working conditions, and that it can obtain these results by encouraging collective bargaining and arming those who represent labor with the right to use strikes and boycott.

"It has not decided that it wants price fixing, the driving out of independent enterprise, the stoppage of improvement in technology or the private imposition of useless cost in order to create unnecessary or parasitic work.

"The priceless right of labor to maintain collective bargaining must not be used for illegitimate ends and the remedy is to impose penalties by law on those shortsighted labor leaders who are foolish enough to use their power for purposes which have nothing to do with the legitimate aims of labor."

K. T. Keller, president of Chrysler Corporation, which in recent months has become one of the world's major manufacturers of Army tanks, told the manufacturers "the great sacrifices and dislocations which we now are undergoing can only be justified by the promise of more and greater opportunities for our people in the years of peace to come."

Keller called for "a pat on the back and a friendly hand" for industry and told his audience:

"Deliveries of defense items in 1942 (by the automobile industry) will probably run upward of three billion dollars. The industry has already delivered one-quarter of a million military vehicles to our own armed forces and to the non-Axis governments. . . .

"In one month we are now producing more tanks in the Chrysler tank arsenal than were built in this country during the whole of the previous World War," Keller said.

Criticized Unjustly

Industry, Keller said, is loudly praised for its good deeds when the country needs things in a hurry. But, because it is such an important part of our life, it is often blamed for all the ills of the country.

"Nobody knows better than American industry that it has made mistakes in the past and will make others in the future. But it is willing to correct them. It is managed by mortals who claim neither infallibility nor perfection. There are no self-designated supermen in American industry today."

J. Howard Pew, president of the Sun Oil Co., of Philadelphia, told the manufacturers that: "If businessmen are to respond to pure patriotism they must resist any effort to destroy the competitive urge in this hour of great need. We must resist any such effort from any direction on the part of any misguided individual or group of individuals, inside or outside of the Government, no matter how sincere they may be."

"A sick and dying country," and worse, "a sick and dying faith in the greatest principle that man has evolved in his long struggle upward from savagery—the democracy of the American people" would result from failure to meet the challenge of the dictatorships, Dr. Robert G. Sproul, president of the University of California, told the industrialists.

Lawrence Tibbett's Son Joins Army

Los Angeles, Dec. 5 (AP).—Actors Lawrence Tibbett, jr., and Douglas Young, each 21, were inducted into the Army today.

Tibbett, son of the noted singer, came here three months ago from New York for a vacation after appearing in the stage play, "The Man Who Came to Dinner."

Young, who came here a year ago from San Antonio, Tex., has enacted numerous dramatic roles on radio programs.

Coordinate Work, British Aid Groups Urged

Voluntary coordination of the more than 60 agencies now operating in the United States to send war relief to Great Britain was urged upon representatives of those separate organizations yesterday. At the invitation of the President's Committee on War Relief Agencies, the conferees met in the Washington Building, Fifteenth Street and New York Avenue Northwest.

Joseph E. Davies, former Ambassador to Russia, said there was great danger that these agencies, together with 111 others partially in the same work, "might hurt" their cause unless a spirit of coordination and control were established.

"A situation should be created," said Davies, "whereby the charitable impulses of the American people can be made effective through organizations acting from voluntary motives, rather than to have soliciting organizations controlled and coordinated by law, as is the practice in Canada."

It was pointed out that the British ministry of health has requested that all medical and nursing personnel, hospitals and hospital equipment, and medical and surgical equipment and supplies be sent through the British Red Cross and the American Red Cross.

Following a second conference Tuesday in New York, an advisory board is expected to draw up plans for carrying the committee's recommendations into effect. Meanwhile, the committee will act as a central agency or clearing house for the separate organizations.

Rites for Mrs. Linkins Tomorrow

Funeral services for Mrs. Nettie H. Linkins, 61, 811 Thayer Avenue, Silver Spring, Md., who died Thursday night after a long illness, will be held tomorrow at 2:30 p. m. at the Warner E. Pumphrey funeral home, 8424 Georgia Avenue, Silver Spring. Burial will be in Colesville Cemetery.

A native of Montgomery County, Mrs. Linkins lived all her life in Silver Spring. She was a charter member of the Women's Improvement Club of Silver Spring, the oldest women's organization in the community; a member of the Silver Spring Chapter, 69, Order of the East Star, and the Women's Society of Christian Service of the Woodside Methodist Church. She was the daughter of the late William and Augusta Turner.

Surviving are her husband, William G., Linkins; three sons, Bernard R., Robert A. and Clyde L. Linkins, all of Silver Spring; also two sisters, Mrs. John Barnes, of Silver Spring, and Mrs. Alice Ulrich, Bell, Calif., and three brothers, Charles Turner, Arlington, Va.; John Edward Turner, Conoga Park, Calif., and Benjamin Turner, Bath, N. Y.

House Votes U. S. Wage Rise Funds

Deficiency Measure Provides Cash to Start Graduated Salary Increases

The eight billion dollar national defense appropriation bill passed by the House yesterday carried good news for 220,000 Federal and District employes. They will get pay increases under the Ramspeck Pay Promotion Act.

Of the total to share in the $3,300,000 appropriated to meet the raises, 59,234 are employed in Washington by the Federal and District Governments. The District employes due for more pay number 3158. They will get a total of $116,015.

Not All Rises Immediate

Not all of the beneficiaries of the bill will get their increases immediately, if the bill passes the Senate and is signed by the President. One group of them, including 160,000 employes would get raises retroactive to October 1. A second group would get salary advances on January 1, while a third would become eligible next April 1.

The increases will be made in four brackets—$60, $100, $200 and $250. Most of the employes who will get increases are those receiving less than $3200 a year. They will get boosts of $60 and $100.

Chief among the improvements offered the District area is appropriation of funds for roads and approaches joining the new War Department building in Arlington County and the Potomac bridges. No sum is named in the bill for the road improvements.

The District Government employes who will benefit are among 223,332 Federal workers scheduled to receive wage increases through the Mead-Ramspeck Bill, to which the appropriations bill acts as an enabling mesure.

Other improvements offered the area under the bill include appropriation of $40,000 for equipment at St. Elizabeth's Hospital; $8900 for increased personnel at Freedman's Hospital tubercular unit; and $86,280 for an increased number of janitors and guards at the Washington National Airport.

Ewing Seeks To Bar Data In Attack Case

Foreshadowing his pending trial for the alleged rape of a 19-year-old Government stenographer, Orman W. Ewing took the witness stand in District Court yesterday in an effort to suppress several items of evidence that the Government is expected to use against him.

Justice James W. Morris continued the hearing on Ewing's motion until this morning after the defendant and Hester Chamberlain, co-owner of the property in which the alleged offense took place, had testified.

The 58-year-old former Democratic national committeeman from Utah told the court that he has been forced to submit to blood tests and other physical examinations while being held in jail without bond. He related that he had been subjected against his will to physical indignities in the course of these tests.

Demands Return

Charging that the prosecution intends to use the results against him in his trial, Ewing is demanding through his defense attorney, Homer L. McCormick, that these be returned to him.

Ewing also charges that the police took the door check which he is alleged to have broken in forcing his way into the assaulted girl's room, together with some bed linen in an illegal search of the boarding house at 1101 Sixteenth Street.

He told the court that he and tall, attractive Miss Chamberlain were joint owners of the property and that neither gave police permission to search for evidence.

He is asking that these, too, be returned to him.

U. S. Attorneys' Stand

Assistant United States Attorneys John W. Fihelly and Charles B. Murray told Morris that they would show that Ewing had consented to the physical tests, and that Miss Chamberlain gave police permission to search the scene of the alleged attack.

Miss Chamberlain denied this on the stand, but became somewhat hazy on the question under Fihelly's cross-examination.

Several From D.C. To Attend Jewish Welfare Parley

Representatives of the Jewish Community Center and the Army and Navy Committee of Washington will attend an important convention of the Middle Atlantic States region of the Jewish Welfare Board this weekend in Baltimore.

Speakers at the Sunday session include Sir Willmott Lewis, Washington correspondent of the London Times; Maj. Gen. Henry C. Pratt, Rabbi David De Sola Pool and Frank Weil, president of the Welfare Board.

Morris Cafritz, chairman of the Washington Army and Navy Committee; Edward Rosenblum, director of the Jewish Center, and Ezekiel London, field representative of the U. S. O., will make reports at the Sunday session on what is being done to provide for the spiritual and recreational needs of servicemen in this area.

Morris Cafritz, Dr. Ivy A. Pelzman, Benjamin Ourisman, David Wiener, Moe Offenberg, Burnett Siman, Abe Shefferman, Isidore Hershfield, Joseph A. Wilner, Edward Rosenblum, Fred S. Gichner, Harry Viner, Edward C. Ostrow and William Bush.

Red Caps' Chief Charges Race Discrimination

Discrimination against Negroes prevails throughout terminals, hindering collective bargaining efforts of his union, Willard S. Townsend, Negro, of Chicago, International President of the United Transport Employes Union, charged yesterday at the Labor Department in the concluding session of a hearing on the 10-cents-a-bag system for Red Cap service.

Railroad mediation procedures are such, Townsend claimed, that Red Caps cannot get anywhere through threat of a strike because, even with approximately 3000 Red Caps in his union, it would not cripple railroad service very much to walk out.

The hearing, conducted by Thomas Holland, director of the division of research and statistics, wage-hour division, opened Monday, in accordance with a Senate resolution directing the administrator of the wage-hour division to hold hearings at important terminals throughout the country.

It is expected the final report will be in the hands of the wage-hour administrator about January 15.

Motorist Held For Grand Jury In Dodson Death

Vernie Plumbley, 23, of 4614 Fifth Street Northwest, was bound over to the grand jury yesterday for its action in connection with the death of Emmett Dodson, 39, of 813 Mount Vernon Place Northwest.

An occupant of an automobile driven by Plumbley Monday, Dodson was fatally injured in a collision with a taxicab at Thirteenth and Kenyon Streets Northwest.

Policeman C. A. Houff, of the accident investigation unit, said he had chased Plumbley from Seventh and M Streets Northwest at 50 miles an hour. Plumbley had ignored a red light at Seventh and M, the officer said.

Negro Artist Honored; Once Lived on 25c Week

Cleveland, Dec. 5 (AP).—A Negro artist who lived in a theater basement on 25 cents a week while going to high school will be represented in the Library of Congress' collection of American art.

A black and white print by William E. Smith, 28, was presented today to Archibald MacLeish, Librarian of Congress, for hanging in the Washington institution.

Presentation was made at the twenty-sixth annual meeting of Karamu House, Negro cultural and art center which found Smith—an orphan in his teens—living in a theater basement and subsisting on potatoes. Karamu offered him art instruction and Smith now is a teacher at the settlement.

His picture, titled "Nobody Knows," was chosen as the best in a Karamu House print contest. It is a facial study of a Negro looking upward with hopeful expression.

MacLeish, here "just as a poet," read several of his verses and said he was "thoroughly moved" by the Karamu dance group's original interpretation of his poem "Western Sky."

Culligan Lauds Spirit of New Fighting Force

The new American army "has an esprit de corps which will make it the most formidable fighting force in the world," Maj. Ernest M. Culligan, public relations director, Selective Service System, told the ninth annual debate conference for high school students at George Washington University yesterday.

In 14 years of observing and serving with National Guardsmen and Regulars, the major said, "I have never seen a more formidable military machine than that which took part in the Carolina maneuvers."

Advocating military service for young men, Maj. Culligan pointed to its health benefits and asserted that such a training program is essential to the Nation in achieving peace and maintaining it in the future.

Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary, People's Lobby, taking the negative side, said "America is in a jam now because the economic royalists of the world, acting through alleged rulers, preferred Hitler to a radical Spain under Loyalist control, preferred Hitler to Russia, and hoped they could get Hitler to smash Russia so they could redistribute the world to keep the scarcity profit system operating a while longer.

"Some sort of universal compulsory military training will be very helpful if not essential to maintain this scarcity-profit economy, but people with vision don't want to maintain such a system. They prefer an economy of abundance," Marsh said.

The students, representing high schools in Washington and nearby areas, debated the question, "Should every able-bodied citizen of the United States be required to have one year of full-time military training before attaining the present draft age?" in small groups yesterday afternoon and will report their findings at the session at 9:15 a. m. today.

Talks Banned At Bar Group's Dinner Tonight

The District Bar Association's annual dinner at the Mayflower Hotel tonight will be marked by "very unusual" entertainment and no speeches, according to David A. Hart, chairman of the association's publicity committee.

The entertainment, Hart said, will be furnished by "a large group of members of the association and entertainers of national reputation." Archie C. Shipe is general chairman of the dinner committee and Mathias Mahorner is chairman of the ticket committee.

Guests of honor will include:

United States Court of Appeals—Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner, Justice Harold M. Stephens, Justice Justin Miller, Justice Henry W. Edgerton, Justice Fred M. Vinson, Justice Wiley Rutledge.

District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia—Chief Justice Alfred A. Wheat, Justice Jennings Bailey, Justice Jesse C. Adkins, Justice Oscar L. Luhring, Justice James M. Public officials—Francis Biddle, Charles Fahy, Henry P. Chandler, Edward M. Curran, Richmond B. Keech, John B. Colpoys, Guy Mason, Gen. Charles W. Kutz, Homer Cummings, Gregory Hankin.

Schools Assured Of WPA Lunches

The cut in the District WPA payroll ordered for Tuesday will not affect Washington's school lunch program, Ross Hayworth, District WPA director, said yesterday.

The lunches, provided by WPA employes, will be one of several municipal projects that will continue despite the lopping of 200 persons from the 4700 now on the payroll.

Painters Union Votes $2000 for Its Needy

Painters Local 368, A. F. L., has made a special Christmas appropriation of $2000 from its treasury to aid needy families of its members, Joseph P. Hillock, business agent, announced yesterday.

Hillock, in announcing the painters' action, urged other unions to make similar appropriations for aid of the needy in their groups.

Youth Rally Hears Pepper Assail Hitler

"Adolf Hitler is a devil from hell," Senator Claude Pepper declared last night denouncing those who propose a negotiated peace with Germany. "You had just as well try to make peace witht a mad dog or a rattlesnake," he said. "How can you make peace with the devil?"

He spoke here at a rally for national defense sponsored by the Washington Youth Council, an organization whose members are drawn from approximately 50 youth organizations of the city. Other speakers were from the British and Chinese embassies.

Fears For South America

If Hitler gets a foothold in South America," Pepper said, "with plenty of money and plenty of propaganda the first thing you know you will be having a revolution down there." And after this spearhead of "Nazi aggression" is established and the Nazi party takes over, "what are we going to say?" he asked.

In the Senate and House, he said, some members act as if the danger "were a million miles away when instead it is knocking at our door."

Another speaker was T. S. Tsui, first secretary of the Chinese Embassy who stated that in a war of aggression the students are always "the objects of destruction." But in China today, he said, "the students are not afraid. Their condition may be miserable but they see in this war a bright hope for their future."

Briton Speaks

Capt. E. H. Wood, of the British Embassy also spoke describing the fine spirit of English youth amid the present "blood and unpleasantness."

Otehr speakers included Jack McMichael, national chairman, American Youth Congress, and Charles H. Houston, former counsel, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Morris Tepping, president of the organization, presided at the meeting which was held in the drama hall of Foundry Methodist Church, Sixteenth and P Streets Northwest.

House Votes to Let Thai Premier's Son Enter West Point

Copyright by New York Times.

The House unanimously adopted a joint resolution yesterday by which Ananta Khittasangka, 22-year-old son of the premier of Thailand, would be permitted to enter the United States Military Academy for an education.

Earlier in the day, three Republicans, Representatives Mitchener and Hoffman, of Michigan, and Rich, of Pennsylvania, indicated they would block consideration of the measure, and Speaker Sam Rayburn induced Chairman May of the Military Affairs Committee to withdraw it.

Near adiournment time, it was offered again on the plea that Secretary Hull greatly desired its adoption. There was no objection and the resolution was sent to the Senate.

Two Youths and Girl Get Prison Terms in Robberies

An 18-year-old youth left the courtroom fighting to keep back the tears while his 21-year-old companion walked stolidly behind him yesterday, after Justice James W. Morris had sentenced the pair to an aggregate of from five years and three months to 21 years in prison for a series of armed robberies.

Edward B. Buckler, 18, and George C. Reidy were given nine months to three years on each of seven holdups, in some of which they are alleged to have beaten their victims. The sentences are to run consecutively.

Also sobbing as she left the court was diminutive blonde Ann Simpson Goore, once identified by a robbery victim as "the lady in red." Dressed yesterday in a sober black gown, the 25-year-old Charlotte, N. C. girl was sentenced from 6 to 18 months on two charges of larceny.

Just the opposite of Buckler and Miss Goore, however, was jaunty John J. Phillips, given four months to a year and a day for passing a worthless check in a local grocery store.

With a smile as wide as his bowtie, he addressed the court after sentence had been pronounced:

"Judge Morris, I want to take this opportunity to wish you a very merry Christmas and a prosperous 1942.

"You are the most magnanimous judge I've ever been before, and I've been before a lot. I've been in and out of jail since 1915. And any person that comes before you a second time deserves to get the limit."

The justice thanked him and told him to behave himself when he finished this sentence.

Racial Ban In Property Deed Upheld

D. C. Court Declares That HOLC Part In Deal Does Not Affect Covenant

Restrictive covenants which prohibit the sale of Washington real estate to Negroes were held valid in District Court yesterday by Justice Matthew F. McGuire. In a broad decision, the jurist further ruled that intervening ownership of the property by the Home Owners Loan Corporation does not cancel such a contract.

The decision arose from a suit brought by Rebecca Gorewitz and Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Bogikes, all of the 2300 block of Thirteenth Street Northwest, against Mr. and Mrs. Frederick F. Hundley, Negro residents of 2530 Thirteenth Street Northwest, and Nelson D. Holmes, of 411 Franklin Street Northeast.

McGuire upheld contentions of the plaintiffs that the Hundleys should be barred from occupying their premises because the original deed on the property prohibited Negro occupants.

The persons who bought the Thirteenth Street property under the restricted covenant later transferred it to the HOLC, which in turn conveyed it to Holmes. Holmes then sold it to the Hundleys.

The defendants asserted that the HOLC ownership of the land canceled the restricting obligations inasmuch as it is a Federal agency and therefore could not be bound by a private contract drawn up between citizens.

The justice declared, however, that when such an agency becomes involved in a private transaction, it loses "its sovereign character and takes that of a private citizen," even though its capital stock is owned by the United States.

"A government never exercises its sovereignty in such a situation," he asserted. "It merely acts as a corporator, and exercises no other power in the management of the affairs of the corporation than are expressly given in the corporating act."

He granted the injunction even though there had been previous Negro occupancy of 2526 Thirteenth Street, and in spite of the fact that the Hundleys had spent upward of $2000 in improving their home.

"The validity of covenants and agreements of this nature have been generally upheld," he added, "especially in this District. It is axiomatic that such restrictions constitute valid and solemn contracts which ordinarily will not be lightly set aside."

'See You in Church . . .'

1- CHRISTMAS BENEFIT—Parish members last night staged a benefit Christmas party at St. Dominic's Church, Sixth and F Streets Southwest. Among the fair parishioners were (from left) Agnes Burke, Margaret Sheaffer and Kathleen McDermott, all enjoying a repast

2. INDOOR CIRCUS—The young people of St. Paul's Methodist Church, Thirteenth and Crittenden Streets Northwest, last night presented an indoor circus for the benefit of the church school. Dick Phillips, clown, and J. Nelson Anderson, ringmaster, found time to devote to Doris Layman, tight-rope walker

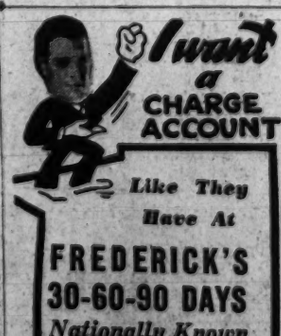
3. DEFENSE RALLY—Washington Youth Council members staged a rally for national defense last night at the Foundry Methodist Church, Sixteenth and P Streets Northwest. T. L. Tsui, First Secretary of the Chinese Embassy, received a defense button from Anne Gordon, secretary of the W. Y. C.

Child Custody Hearing Delayed

A hearing to determine whether Flora Loucas or her estranged husband, John T. Loucas, will have custody of their 8-year-old son, Tommy, was postponed until Tuesday morning by Justice David A. Pine in District Court yesterday.

Mrs. Loucas is charging that her husband, who lives at 499 C Street Southwest, brought Tommy here after he had taken him "by trickery" from a Port Chester, N. Y., boarding school. The wife, a New York furrier, claims that custody of the youngster was awarded her by a New York court, and wants Pine to return him to her.

She is represented by Attorney Stephen Ingham, while the husband, said to be in the shoe repair business here, is represented by James Shenos.



Cross-Town Buses Win Approval

Hankin Proposal Given Indorsement By Chillum Heights Citizens Association

Indorsement of the proposed plans for cross-town bus lines recently made public by Public Utility Commissioner Gregory Hankin was given last night by members of the Chillum Heights Citizens Association who have long been working toward this end.

The members also were gratified to hear a report which makes it appear that another object for which they have been working is a little nearer realization. This is the establishment of a fire station at Hawaii Avenue and Crittendon Streets Northeast, for which they were told, money has been appropriated to draw up plans and specifications.

At the conclusion of the business meeting in the Keene School, Blair and Riggs Roads Northeast, presided over by President Michael Finan, the Deputy Air Raid Warden for the area, Cyrus Bright, took the chair. He brought the members up to date on civilian defense plans in their territory and urged the necessity for the cooperation by all citizens in the program. Six children of members of Columbia Post number 34, American Legion, entertained.

Randle Highlands

A change in taxi zoning regulations that would give the far Southeast section of the city cheaper cab fares was urged last night by the Randle Highlands Citizens Association. At present residents must pay 80 cents for a ride from downtown.

The association will erect a Christmas tree on a site to be located on Minnesota Avenue, and Christmas Eve ceremonies will be planned.

Everett Mehler was named chairman of a publicity committee for a campaign for new members. The request of the Eleventh Precinct Station for new motor equipment was received, and, following favorable action, forwarded to District officials.

District Air Raid Warden Gets 3 Aides

Commissioner John Russell Young, coordinator of civilian defense in the metropolitan area, yesterday announced appointment of three assistants to Chief Air Raid Warden Clement Murphy and named James A. Councilor defense auditor for the area.

The assistants named were: John Saul, realtor; Arch McDonald, radio commentator, who will serve in the Maryland "fringe" area, and Lieut. Col. Henry O. Atwood, reserve officer on duty with the District public school system.

Coordinator Young at the same time called upon Fire Chief Stephen T. Porter to speed up organization of the volunteer fire auxiliary force. Physical examinations for the first 800 volunteer firemen have been completed, he pointed out, and it is time to build the force up to 3000.

Capt. Anthony Lucas, director of rescue squads for the District Defense Council, announced that meetings of volunteers interviewed for these services would be held next week.

White volunteers will meet Wednesday at 8 p. m. at Macfarland Junior High School and Negro volunteers will meet Thursday at 8 p. m. at Banneker Junior High School. Capt. Lucas said physical examination and training schedules would be completed.

The traditions of centuries of craftsmanship make the Anderson watch a gift of enviable beauty and a prized possession. Prices start at $29.75. Divided payments arranged.

'Ringer' Owner Sought On Illinois Warrant

Texas Turfman Named in Paper Charging False Pretense Action at Hawthorne

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Dec. 5.—Roy V. C. VanCleave, Abilene, Tex., owner of the thoroughbred Hasty Notion, which ran under the name of "Rapid Bone" at Hawthorne Race Track, Chicago, September 24, today was named in warrants charging false pretense.

VanCleave is said to be now at the Tanforan track, near San Francisco Calif. Police there have been notified and, according to Richard Austin, assistant State's attorney, extradition proceedings will be taken to return him to Chicago for trial.

The warrant, issued by a justice of the peace in suburban Cicero, where Hawthorne is located, was signed by Charles Krutchkoff, president of the track. In it, VanCleave is charged with signing a written instrument obtained by false pretenses, this being the winner's check for $800 which VanCleave collected.

The horse, shipped from Baltimore as a polo pony, was heavily wagered on in other sections of the country when he ran to victory at odds of 8 to 1 September 24, but was only mildly played at the track. The horse ran twice at Hawthorne, winning his first start, and finished second in his second start before suspicion was aroused by the racing officials.

Indiana Squad Defends Coach After Criticism

By the Associated Press

Bloomington, Ind., Dec. 5.—Thirty-five members of the Indiana University football squad vigorously defended Coach A. N. (Bo) McMillin and his staff today in a letter to the Indiana Daily Student, campus newspaper.

The letter was in answer to an editorial in the Student on November 27 which questioned some of McMillin's coaching policies and criticized his attitude toward the student body.

Winston C. Fournier, of Frankfort, editor of the paper and author of the original editorial, said the football squad's letter would be published tomorrow.

The grid squad's letter said members of the Daily Student staff were in no position to judge the football team's efforts on any count except team spirit.

"The one thing that you should be allowed to check us on is our team spirit, and by your own admission it was very fine," the letter said.

"We think that Bo is the best head coach possible for Indiana," the letter continued. "There may be other coaches that might do the job better in other schools, but we doubt if they could do the job that he is doing at our school."

Among the players who signed the letter were Gene White, of South Bend, captain of the 1941 team; Bob White, of Joliet, Ill., captain-elect for 1942, and Billy Hillenbrand, of Evansville, backfield star who was voted by the players as the most valuable man to the team.

The original editorial appeared in the Daly Student after the Hoosiers had turned in only two victories in eight games during the 1941 season.

Greenberg, Collecting $10, Leaves Army

By the Associated Press

Fort Custer, Mich., Dec. 5.—Still clad in Army khaki, Sergt. Henry Greenberg said goodbv today to the camp where he has been a soldier nearly seven months and set out "to make himself ready to take over the old job with the Detroit Tigers."

Greenberg, with permission of fort authorities, completed the routine of departure an hour ahead of a group scheduled for release. He collected his $10 back-pay check, hauled in heavy Army locker to the supply station, shook hands all around and stepped into his automobile and drove to Detroit. There he changed to civilian clothes.

The Tigers' star outfielder planned to spend the night in Detroit with friends and then proceed to his home in New York.

"After that, it's baseball," Hank declared.

He spent 180 days in the Army before being discharged under the revised law that permits the release of men over 28.

Although he insisted that future plans were not yet definite, big Hank indicated he was considering plans for participation in some kind of program that will help provide recreation for men in service.

What Was the Deer Doing on Third Base?

Berlin, Md., Dec. 5 (AP).—Paul Wimbrow tramped far and wide through Worcester County seeking a deer. Wearily homeward bound, empty handed, he passed the Libertytown baseball field, and saw an eight-point buck standing on third base. Wimbrow nailed the deer between third and home plate.

Texas Aggies Play Wash. State Today

By the Associated Press

Tacoma, Dec. 5.—A bowl game featuring one bowl team and another which missed a bowl by 10 minutes had usually staid Tacoma seething with intersectional football excitement tonight.

Tacoma's Evergreen Bowl game will pit Texas A. & M., Cotton Bowl team and Southwest Conference champion, against Washington State College, Pacific Conference giant killer. W. S. C. was in line for a Rose Bowl bid until Oregon State scored its winning touchdown in the final 10 minutes last week-end against Oregon.

Because both teams are offense-minded, and because neither knows too much about the other, wagering around town was even money on the outcome.

Occasional showers were forecast, which may affect the Texans more than the Cougars. The game will be played in the Stadium High School Bowl. Some 27,000 are expected to attend. It's a dirt field, and the going may get pretty gooey. (Kickoff 1:30 p. m. P. S. T.)

Gov. Heil Pays Football Debt—60 Lbs. Cheese

By the Associated Press

St. Paul, Dec. 5.—Gov. Julius Heil, of Wisconsin, paid his football debt to Gov. Harold Stassen, of Minnesota, today by sending a 60-pound Wisconsin cheese to the Minnesota executive.

Heil had bet a choice Wisconsin cheese and Stassen a tub of choice Minnesota butter on the annual Minnesota game, which the Gophers won November 22, 41 to 6.

The cheese was presented to Gov. Stassen by Arthur H. Smith, president of the Minnesota Chapter of the Wisconsin Alumni Association, and the Governor divided his winnings between children's sanitariums in Minneapolis and St. Paul.

Miami's Late Goal Wins Over V.M.I.

By the Associated Press

Miami, Fla., Dec. 5.—Pat Petroski, sophomore guard, placekicked a field goal with only a minute to go tonight to give Miami a 10-to-7 victory over the V. M. I. football team before 19,534 spectators in the Orange Bowl Stadium.

Seemingly destined for a tie with the underdog, outmanned Keydets, Miami suddenly came to life late in the fourth period as the clock ticked off precious minutes.

Starting from their 23, the Hurricanes pushed as far as the V. M. I. eight before the Virginians tightened. On fourth down, with the ball midway between the sideline stripes on the 21 Petroski made Miami's last bid for victory. The stocky guard got off a wobbly but true kick that rounded out the Hurricane's season of eight victories against two defeats.

Extra Point Good

Miami got a touchdown first, driving 64 yards. Russell Coats and Bob McDougal put the ball in scoring position when they got together on a lateral pass play good for 22 yards to the four. Joe Krutulis swept around end on an end-around play that has caught Miami opponents napping all year.

Petroski tuned up for his victory bringing effort by making good the extra point from placement.

Nelson Scores

Pritchard took a pass from Joe Muha for seven yards, then tossed one to Muha for 13. Running plays picked up five and Pritchard connected with Billy Clark for 23 yards to the one. Capt. Nelson smashed over, making his last touchdown for V. M. I.

Muha's placekick tied the score. Only 26 men were available to

Melton-Lavagetto Trade Hangs Fire

Negotiations Temporarily Broken Off As Baseball Men Move to Chicago Meeting

By the Associated Press

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 5.—The hottest trade left sizzling as the baseball meetings broke up today was a deal between the New York Giants and Brooklyn Dodgers which reportedly would send Lefty Cliff Melton to the National League champions for Third Baseman Cookie Lavagetto.

Negotiations were temporarily broken off while the baseball crowd shifted to Chicago, where the major leagues will be in session next week, but there seemed to be good prospects that some such trade might be closed there.

It might have been completed here except that Brooklyn has been searching for a third baseman and probably is loathe to part with Lavagetto until President Larry MacPhail can get his hands on another.

Brooklyn's greatest need is a southpaw pitcher and the veteran Melton, who won eight and lost 11 last season, is about the best portsider available to the Dodgers. He will be 29 years old next month, but has been in the major leagues only five years and many managers believe he has considerable pitching ability left. He won 20 games for the Giants when he broke in in 1937, but hasn't been anywhere near that since. Boss Bill Terry of the Giants has somewhat soured on him, for that reason, and no doubt would be willing to part with him.

Hit .277 Last Year

Lavagetto, 27, came into the National League in 1934 as a second baseman and later developed into one of the leading third baseman of the circuit. But last season his batting slipped to .277 and he was kept out of the line up against left-handers toward the end of the season.

There was some chance that the Dodgers were hoping to get Chuck Aleno, of Cincinnati, to play third base, however, as a preliminary to the trade with the Giants.

Cronin Hints He's Reached Trail's End

By the United Press

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 5.—Ball players never like to admit that Father Time has caught up with them, but Joe Cronin, manager of the Boston Red Sox and one of the greatest American League shortstops of all time, today confessed that he had almost reached the end of the trail.

"I am getting ready to retire to the dugout," Cronin said. "Whether I take myself out of the regular lineup next season depends largely on a young lad named John Pesky. If Pesky can make the grade at shortstop for us then I'll become a bench manager. I'll remain on the active list for pinch-hitting duties and maybe take an occasional turn at shortstop when the occasion demands it, but I hope Pesky is so good that he can make me stay in the dugout."

Pesky, a 21-year-old Portland, Oreg., boy, played shortstop last season for the Louisville American Association club and was voted the league's most valuable player. He appeared in 146 games and batted .325, the identical figure he hit in his first year in organized ball at Rocky Mount, N. C., in 1939.

Early Sheely, Red Sox scout, who has followed Pesky's rise closely, believes the youngster is ready.

"One of the outstanding things about Pesky is his legs," said Sheely. "He developed them ice skating around Portland. He is a star ice hockey player and would be with one of the professional teams in his region if the Red Sox hadn't forbidden it."

Mel Ott's Friends Use Newspaper Ad To Hail Their Hero

By the Associated Press

New Orleans, Dec. 5.—Old friends of Mel Ott, who grew up in suburban Gretna, today paid tribute to the new manager of the New York Giants baseball team.

The tribute was a three-quarter page newspaper advertisement captioned "an open letter to Mel Ott, Esq.," and was signed by 20 businessmen who know Ott intimately.

The ad read:

"Dear Mel:

". . . We have watched your performances since the day you first broke into the Giant line-up and have gloried in your fine ability as an athlete and your true sportsmanship . . .

"Mel Ott, gentleman and sportsman.

"We are gratified that you are taking over the helm of the New York Giants and know that the destinies of this time-honored ball club are in most capable hands."

Feller Will Reveal His Plans Next Week

Van Meter, Iowa, Dec. 5 (AP).—Bob Feller, major league strikeout king, said today he would have an announcement next week, probably at the major leagues' meeting in Chicago, concerning his plans for entering the armed forces.

Pending the announcement, the Cleveland pitcher declined comment on published reports that both the Navy and the Air Corps were seeking his services.

Justice Douglas, Odell Head Father-Son Guests at Friends

For the sixth straight year Sidwell-Friends School called in its five sizes of footballers last night, fed them royally, awarded them 1941 letters, and again presented them to a long line of distinguished guests, topped by Supreme Court Justice W. O. Douglas and Howard Odell, backfield coach at the University of Pennsylvania.

Following a short speech by Odell, movies of the Penn football team were unreeled. Presiding over the meeting which followed dinner were Dick Loos, president of the Boys Athletic Association; Delos Smith, jr., vice president, and John Carter, secretary-treasurer.

Among the honor guests were Albert E. Rogers, headmaster of Friends; Rev. Albert Lucas, headmaster of St. Alban's School; J. Austin Stone, chairman of the board of trustees; George Snyder, trustee of Penn University; Cecil Dawd, acting headmaster of Bullis School; Ribert Middleton, coach at St. Alban's, and T. Janney Brown, former Friends patron.

WASHINGTON, DEC. 6, 1941

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Out of the All-American madness has emerged at least one refreshing note—recognition of the University of Virginia's Bill Dudley as a rightful member of football's select company. The sudden swing to Dudley as an All-American halfback is almost faith-restoring in the abused business of picking the Nation's best 11 football players.

POVICH

The Dudley boom has been downright amazing. Until three weeks ago he was just a backfield man at a school that doesn't go in for big-time football. He was leading the Nation in scoring, but more often than not that has been a drawback to All-American ambitions. The well-defined suspicion always is that the leading scorer isn't moving in very fast company. The tendency is to ignore that sort of a fellow.

And until the sustained brilliance of Dudley finally pierced the defense mechanism of metropolitan critics, they were ignoring Dudley in the grand manner. To make their early commitments look good, the All-American selectors beat the drums for such as Bruce Smith, of Minnesota; Bob Westfall, of Michigan; Frank Albert, of Stanford; Derace Moser, of Texas A. and M.; Frank Sinkwich, of Georgia, and Steve Filipowicz, of Fordham. This guy Dudley had only native-son support in Virginia.

Unlike the star of the big-time team, Dudley was the beneficiary of no gaudy press-agentry. Dick Turner, at Charlottesville, concerned himself chiefly with publicizing Dudley within the State. Except for a couple of rare precedents, the sudden swing to Dudley would be unexplainable.

Those precedents involved, firstly, Earl (Dutch) Clark, of Colorado College and, secondly, Tuffy Leemans, of George Washington. That pair, from small-time colleges, made possible Dudley's All-American selection to a great degree. In the case of Clark, who was named to the Associated Press All-American team 13 years ago, there was great amazement among folks who had never heard of Colorado College as a football power, much less a guy named Clark. But Clark went on in professional football to become perhaps the best pro player in history and justify the All-American experts.

Leeman's case presents the reverse side of the picture. He never was selected on anybody's All-America team despite his exploits at G. W. U. Thus it is, perhaps, in the fear that they might repeat the Leemans blunder that the critics have looked more kindly on Dudley's feats for a smaller college. Dudley could be another Leemans, and their faces are still red from their omission of Tuffy from All-American mention. The Leemans case sort of ran interference for Dudley in the latter's claims to All-American selection.

So widely was Leemans ignored that when the National Pro League teams drew up their list of nearly 200 graduating collegians who could be drafted, the name of Leemans appeared on no coach's list. But sitting in a New York skyscraper was a young fellow who was willing to believe at least some of the reports that Leemans was a fine football player. He was Wellington Mara, young son of Tim Mara, owner of the Giants. An inveterate reader of the out-of-town newspapers, and self-appointed talent scout for his father's football team, young Mara was struck by the lyrical praise of Leemans in the Washington newspapers. At his behest, the Giants grabbed Leemans.

The Giants, in fact, grabbed Leemans before they exercised their option on big-shot college players whose names were on the draft list. And no team ever plucked a better football bargain. Since 1938, Tuffy has been quarterback of the Giants, the smarest-playing club in the pro league. Coach Steve Owens calls Tuffy an inspirational leader. He credits Leemans with calling both of the touchdown plays which sent George Franck around end twice to beat the Redskins last month.

Clark and Leemans Paved Way

Save for the remarkable careers of Clark and Leemans, Dudley may never have won All-American acclaim; may never have been recognized as anything but a pretty good football player on a small-time team. It has come to be a sort of unwritten law among metropolitan experts that the big teams must have at least one All-American player in some position, and there aren't enough positions to go around and thus take care of the smaller schools. Witness the perennial presence of Minnesota, Michigan, Stanford, Fordham and Notre Dame players on the All-American selections.

Dudley's selection is a personal triumph for Frank Murray, Virginia's head coach. Early in the season, Murray declared himself, "I don't care who the experts pick, Bill Dudley's my All-American, the greatest player I ever coached." Dudley, a mere 168-pounder and only 19 years old, received this tribute from Murray: "He's the best runner, the best passer and the best kicker, all in one, that I've ever seen, and he'd be the best pass-catcher if we had another pass-thrower on the Virginia team. Dudley can do everything that Ace Parker ever did at Duke."

Redskins Favored In Finale Tomorrow

The Redskins had to come from behind to beat the Philadelphia Eagles, 20-17, in their first meeting this year in the Quaker City, but in the eyes of the odds-makers either the 'Skins have improved or the Eagles slipped since that date.

If you like the Redskins tomorrow in the final game of the National Pro season here, you have to give 6 to 5, plus 14 points to the Eagles. If you like the Eagles, you get 14 points and give 6 to 5.

In the intracity battle in Chicago where the Bears must beat the Cardinals to tie the Packers for first place in the Western division and make a playoff necessary, the Cardinals are getting 20 points with the usual 6 to 5 odds prevailing either way. The Bears won their first meeting, 53 to 7.

Giants Rule Favorites

The New York battle at the Polo Grounds where the Dodgers meet the Eastern champion Giants in a "Tuffy Leeman's Day" game finds Brooklyn getting six points from the cross-town rivals, although the Dodgers won the first meeting in a mild upset. Should Brooklyn win again, the Redskins will be confined to third place even if they beat the Eagles. They must beat the Eagles while the Dodgers lose to claim a tie for second place and a share of the second team's split of the playoff purse.

Two of the Eagles' best performances this year have been against the Redskins and Chicago Bears in defeat. They held a 14-0 lead over both clubs at one time but lost, 20-17 to the Redskins and 49-14 to the Bears in the second half rout of last Sunday. Otherwise the Philadelphians have beaten the Chicago Cardinals and Steelers and tied the Steelers.

Eagles Improved

The Eagles present an improved club over the 1940 outfit, however, which won only one game, that from Pittsburgh, and lost ten. They were beaten, 34-17 and 13-6 by the Redskins, who, since 1934, have found the Eagles their favorite foe with 11 victories and 2 defeats.

There is a Georgetown influence to the improved record of the Alexis Thompson-owned Philadelphia outfit this season as Jim Castiglia, now their best ball carrier, Joe Frank and Lou Gheças have all played prominent roles as rookies. The three Eagles plus Augie Lio, of the Lions, and Clem Stralka, of the Redskins will be honored in "Georgetown Day" activity by the Hoya band, student body and alumni.

The Redskins have the little matter of a four-game losing streak to snap in their final appearance of 1941. A defeat by the Eagles would be nearly as distasteful as the 1940 exit in the playoff game with the Bears.

The Redskin rookies will be given ample opportunity tomorrow but if the Eagles should get out of hand the Redskin vets will doubtless be shoved in to take over. It will be the final game for all but Sammy Baugh, Willie Wilkin and Dick Farman who have been invited to play with the pro all-stars against the league champs in the Los Angeles pro bowl.

Faurot Gets $10,000 Pact With Missouri

By the Associated Press

Columbia, Mo., Dec. 5.—Dr. Frederick Middlebush, president of the University of Missouri, announced today that Dom Faurot had accepted a new one-year contract as head football coach at a salary of $10,000. Previously he received $7,500.

Under State law, no contract may be made for longer than one year.

In Kansas City, where he was attending the Big Six governing body winter meeting, Faurot said, "I am very happy to stay at the University of Missouri. I called the authorities at the University of Illinois today and requested that they withdraw my name from the list of candidates under consideration for the coaching job there."

Hockey Eagles Defeat Baltimore Orioles in Overtime, 6-4

Courteau's Goal Snaps Tied Score

3287 Watch Old Rivals Fight It Out at Riverside; Burrage Scores Last

By Jack Munhall

Paul Courteau's second goal of the evening broke a 4-to-4 tie and gave the Washington Eagles a 6-to-4 overtime victory over their favorite whipping posts, the Baltimore Orioles, last night before a 1941 record throng of 3287 paying fans at Riverside Stadium.

Courteau's counter, at 6:50, was followed by an unassisted marker by veteran Len Burrage, just 56 seconds before the end of the extra ten-minute session, but that served only to insure the triumph.

The victory was the Eagles' fourth in five matches, in a streak interrupted last week in that riotous 2-to-3 setback by the Atlantic City Sea Gulls. In this connection, incidentally, President Severine Leoffler of the Eagles announced last night that Cecil Dixon, Atlantic City defenseman, whose "sticking" of Burrage touched off the big fight last Tuesday, had received a two-match suspension by the league.

Eagles Lose Early Lead

Until Courteau's decisive goal it appeared as though the Eagles were deserving of a boot in their collective pants, for they had done a grand job of blowing a 4-1 lead. With two quick goals early in the third period and a third at 18:52 of the third period, the Orioles were giving every indication of running off with the match after all. But Goalie Leith Dickie inserted his bulk in front of several threatening Baltimore shots in the last few seconds of the period and the Eagles held on until they could organize themselves for the extra session.

Dickie, continuing his fine streak of net tending after an early slump that placed his job with the Eagles in grave danger, was thrusting aside hard enemy shots all evening and ended up with the nice total of 31 saves.

Washington opened the scoring at 1:14 of the first period on Les Hickey's goal, assisted by Burrage, and the Orioles tied count about three minutes later with the help of a collision that sent Washington Goalie Leith Dickie sprawling on the ice.

Dickie was knocked off his feet when Teammate Paul Courteau checked Carl Piche as the Baltimore center charged in for a shot. When Piche's falling body tripped Dickie, it was child's play for Kovuniemi to push the puck into the unprotected cage.

The Eagles regained the lead at 15:43 as Tom McCormack was on the scoring end of a brilliant play in which Defenseman Keith Allen was the hero. Allen stick-handled the puck through the Baltimore defense and around in back of the Orioles' cage. He then slid the rubber around the side of the nets and right on to the outstretched stick of McCormack, who, with the same motion, deposited it in the net.

Foley Ties Score

Repeating their first-period trick by scoring almost on the first play in the stanza, the Eagles boosted their advantage to 3 to 1 at 1:29 of the third period, with Art Thompson, their hard-working winger, counting on a long, sizzling shot from the blue line and at a difficult angle. Courteau all but duplicated Thompson's long, hard one a little later, with Freddy Weaver assisting, and with 16 minutes to go, Washington held what appeared a prohibitive lead at 4 to 1.

But the Orioles, in scarcely no time at all, reduced their deficit, 3 to 4. Gerald Archambault had the puck in the Washington nets before the crowd had applauded Courteau's goal, and a few seconds later Joe Cook counted again. The Eagles settled down and for more than ten minutes held the Orioles in check, but at 18:52 Bud Foley caused the boys to work overtime when he found himself all alone in front of the Washington nets after taking a pass from Andy Chakowski.

Polich, Olympics Blank Sea Gulls, 5-0

By the Associated Press

Atlantic City, N. J., Dec. 5.—Vic Polich, Boston goalie, virtually snoozed tonight as the Olympics whitewashed the Atlantic City Sea Gulls in an Eastern Amateur Ice Hockey League game, 5 to 0.

1500 Watch 42 Novices Open Tourney

Making up for their lack of experience with an unstinted willingness to fight, 42 eager boys opened preliminary hostilities in the Ninth Golden Gloves boxing tournament last night at Uline's Arena before 1500 spectators as 21 novice bouts were staged.

The Novices, many who had never before appeared in a regulation ring, treated the fans to a slam-bang, thrill-packed show. There were no stop signals as they threw caution to the winds. Last night's vogue was to throw punches and let them fall where they may.

Every class of the six weight divisions supplied its share of action, with the exception of the scheduled 112-pound bout. Little Tony Anastasi of the Prince Georges Boys Club, was so anxious to enter this year's tournament that he reported his age as 16, whereas in reality he is 15. His prospective opponent Mike Cannon of Appolo, was awarded the contest as a forfeit. Tony was a disappointed but wiser boy. He said to tell his friends, "wait 'till next year when I'm old enough to enter the tournament."

In 126-pound class, Essex Madron of the Washington Boys Club, scored an early first-round knockout over Johnny Walker of the Red Shield A. C. Medron possessed too many guns for his Red Shield opponent and won after a minute and 20 seconds of fighting. "Chief" Pete Takes Horse, the full-blooded Indian boy of the National Training School, had the misfortune to meet Dominick Marvaso of Prince Georges Police Boys Club, and lost a three-round decision, but not until he had given his adversary a tough battle.

The opening 160-pound encounter on the card started out as a slugfest between Georgie Vorcoran, of St. Mary's, and Frank Swart, of the Merrick Boys Club, only to turn into a comedy riot. The fight wasn't more than 30 second old before the fans were in stitches over the laughing antics of Swart. Corcoran managed to win by outfumbling his foe.

The show provided nine knockouts, five being of the technical variety. The next installment of the tournament will be staged Friday night with the second round of the novices and probably a couple opening senior bouts.

118-POUND CLASS—Albert Grasiano (N. T. S.) won decision over Eddie Arnold (W. B. C.); John L. Sullivan (Merrick) won decision over Jack Golomb (J. C. C.); Eugene Miller (N. T. S.) won technical knockout in third from Charles Fisher (Police B. C.).

126-POUND CLASS—Warren Moore (Police B. C.) won decision over Milton Corman (U. S. O.); Essex Madron (W. B. C.) knocked out John Walker (Red Shield A. C.) in first round; Dominick Marvaso (Prince Georges B. C.) won decision over Pete Takes Horse (N. T. S.); Eddie Lloyd (St. Marys) won decision over Mike Anamateros (W. B. C.); Emmiti Painter (N. T. S.) won forfeit over Richard Bunt (Prince Georges B. C.).

147-POUND CLASS—Norman O'Neill (Merrick Boys Club) scored T. K. O. over Dave Penn (Police B. C.) in third round; Edward Clark (N. T. S.) knocked out Tony Curcio (unattached) in second round; Francis Leonardi (U. S. Marines) scored T. K. O. in second round over Frank Young (Red Shield); Wilfred Banks (N. T. S.) scored T. K. O. over Edsel Marts (W. B. C.) in second round; Dick Riffle (U. S. O.) won decision over Paul Hubbard (Apollo Club); Edward Scarrow (unattached) won decision over Jack Murphy (Apollo A. C.).

Navy Court Prospects Not Bright—Coach

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Dec. 5.—"Prospects are not so good," Coach Johnny Wilson declared today as he pepped his declared today as he prepped his 14-game schedule, beginning January 7. The Middie coach has lost four of his best six men from last season. Although he has depth in the squad, his material is inexperienced.

"We will have to build our team from the ground up," the mentor declared. "We have just two good players, co-Capts. Bill Busik and Bob Zoeller, available and we'll have to build around them."

He said he didn't think his team would be as good as last year's, which won nine contests and lost five.

The basketball squad is harder hit by the speed-up Naval Academy schedule than the football team. Graduation last February, in the midst of the court season, cost the Middies some regulars and the graduation December 19 will leave the squad without John Ebnet, forward; Phil Gutting, center, and Roy Falconer, guard, who captained the quintet after last February's graduation.

Busik and Zoeller, outstanding football players, play guard and forward, respectively. Others left over from the varsity squad last year are John McTighe, big center, and Gene Huntemer, who can play either guard or forward.

Busik and Zoeller and four other football players, now resting, will report for practice Monday. Vince Anania, Gene Flathmann, Alan Cameron and Warren Montgomery are all guard candidates.

Wilson said he would cut his squad to 20 players next week, when scrimmages begin. This week they have been drilled in fundamentals.

The Schedule

January 7, Catholic University; 10, Columbia; 14, Delaware; 17, Duke; 24, Pennsylvania at Philadelphia.

February 4, Penn State; 7, Virginia; 11, Maryland; 14, William and Mary; 18, West Virginia; 21, North Carolina; 28, Georgetown; 28, Temple.

March 7, Army at West Point.

Pastor, Marshall Sign For Bout Dec. 12

Blue-Gray Officials Claim Bill Dudley Did a 'Run-Out'

By the Associated Press

Montgomery, Ala., Dec. 5.—The Blue and Gray Association "is glad for Bill Dudley, of Virginia, to go to the East-West football game, but is tired of reports from Charlottesville that he did not accept an inviation to participate in our North-South game here December 27," Brig. Gen. W. P. Screws, secretary-treasurer to the organization, said today.

Abish Pritchard, of V. M. I., was selected to replace Dudley, Screws said, when Dudley failed to answer wires requesting his photograph for souvenir programs of the game here, which is sponsored by the Blue-Gray Association.

"On October 13, Dudley accepted an invitation by wire, providing his family had no objections," Screws said. "On October 16 he wired: 'Have talked with family and will accept game bid. Thanks very much.'

"The October 16 wire was confirmed by a letter dated October 18, in which he said, in part: '. . . Let me say again that I am delighted to be able to play and maybe all of us Southerners can make this the South's year.'"

Both the East-West and North-South games are all-star charity affairs, the former played in San Francisco.

7 Washington-Lee Players on Myth Team

Coaches, Writers Pick 3 George Washington High Stars on First Team, 4 on Second

Special Dispatch to The Post

Fredericksburg, Va., Dec. 5.—The annual all northern Virginia mythical high school eleven announced here today gave seven first team selections and two also rans to the Washington Lee Generals of Arlington. George Washington High, of Alexandria, landed three players on the first team and four on the second.

Captaincy of the all northern Virginia Lee guard and only first-team repeater. Wilson, a ball of fire in every game the Generals played, earned the plaudits of virtually all this section of the State. Hi steam-mate, Halfback Jimmy Sprinkle, and Alexandria's sensational sophomore guard, Henry Grimm, were also near unanimous choices.

The only performer to successfully challenge the class A monopoly was 170-pound Charles Partlow, senior halfback, whose smart generalship and magnificent play was instrumental in Culpeper High's march to the eastern Virginia class C championship. Fairfax High and Mount Vernon High were included in the all-northern Virginia selection this year for the first time, but George Rector, of Fairfax, was the only one from the two schools to crash through, he making the second team.

Every coach and sports writer in northern Virginia was invited to submit nominations for the eighteenth annual mythical eleven to be chosen under the auspices of the Free Lance Star, Fredericksburg newspaper

Miss. State Faces Dons Today in Sectional Game

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Dec. 5—Mississippi State College and University of San Francisco meet tomorrow in an intersectional football clash, bringing together the top team of the Old South and a fairly strong Northern opponent.

Mississippi State won the Southeastern Conference championship and lost only to Duquesne. The Dons chalked up four straight wins in the last half of their season, after losing to Stanford, 42 to 28.

Fair weather was forecast with a crowd of 30,000 expected.

U. S. Net Stars Score In Santiago Tourney

Santiago, Chile, Dec. 5 (AP).—United States tennis players advanced through the second round of a special tournament today with Elwood Cooke, Jack Kramer and Dorothy Bundy and Katherine Winthrop registering victories.

Cooke defeated Salvador Deik, 6—3, 6—3; Kramer eliminated Andres Nammersley, 6—3, 6—4 and Miss Bundy and Miss Winthrop teamed together in the women's doubles to dispose of Sarah Palfrey Cook and Valeria Donoz, 6—2, 6—3.

Bethesda Wins In Rout Over NTS Five, 39-6

Using three full teams with the same telling effect, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High opened the schoolboy basketball season in this section yesterday by swamping National Training School, 39-6, on the Baron floor.

For approximately half the first period the out-manned Trainers held the hosts to a 1-1 count, but then the deluge started. Bob Cremins, chunky scoring star of last year, rammed home eight quick points to give his team a 9-1 lead the invaders could never threaten.

Cremins, one of three lettermen on the Baron squad, turned in the high-scoring performance of the game—11 points—though a total of nine players shared in point-making. Clayton Rogers, working with the second five, managed for 6 points, and first-string center Dick Poerstel counted 5.

Three foul goals were the Trainers' limit in the first half as Bethesda hoisted its advantage to 18-3. Shortly after the opening of the third quarter Roy McDade potted nicely for the losers' first, and it later developed, only field goal.

Watching the Barons' impressive start was the Roosevelt High squad, which faces the Barons in its opener Tuesday. Some surprise was expressed by the Rough Riders at the apparent shelfing of the zone system by their Tuesday foes, whose coach, Al Vogt, is one of the few remaining local employers of the style.

Va. Alumni To Fete Coach Here Tonight

Coach Frank Murphy and several members of the University of Virginia's greatest football team in many years will be guests of honor at an alumni smoker tonight at 8 o'clock at the Willard Hotel. All alumni are urged to attend.

Invited to appear with Murphy are six Virginia players hailing from Washington and the near vicinity. They are Francis M. Crenshaw, Herbert N. Munhall, Nicholas G. Schlegel, William S. Mirman and J. Bernard Wyckoff, all of this city, and Don B. Niklason, jr., of Arlington.

In addition to a speech by Murray, whose remarks will include some sidelights on the career of Virginia's captain and all-America halfback, Bill Dudley, movies of the North Carolina-Virginia game will be shown.

A number of outstanding local high and prep school football players, including The Post's all metropolitan team that played in the Tobacco Bowl, have been invited as guests of the Washington alumni chapter.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

WHAT INTERESTS YOU?

BASEBALL—The managerial appointment of Mel Ott is about the worst possible trick the Giants could play on the million or so rabid Dodger fans. It deprives them of an important hate. Ott's a guy that not even the Brooklyn fans can hate, though for 40 years they've been hating Giants' managers with enthusiastic passion. For 30 years the late John McGraw was their pet peeve; for 10 years they sprayed their picturesque animus at Bill Terry, whose ill-timed line, "Is Brooklyn still in the league?" will forever be considered a slur on the sanctity of the Brooklyn home.

CONSIDINE

Ott's about as hard to dislike as any other clam-quiet, industrious, work-a-day business man. We don't recall his ever having taken a stand on a single baseball topic, or ever having spoken out of turn; in fact, ever having spoken period. The only hope of Brooklyn fans to work up a mad against Ott is to get sore at this self-effacing family man for not giving them anything to get sore about. That failing, they'll just have to develop a long-range hate for Terry, now the Giants' chief farmer, and for Horace Stoneham for his treachery in appointing a bloke as affable and inoffensive as Mel Ott.

Incidentally, Ott is one of the comparatively few outfielders who have made the grade as managers. American League Managers McCarthy, Cronin, Dykes, Boudreau, Harris and National League Managers Durocher, Frisch, McKechnie and Lobert were or are infielders.

Connie Mack, Jimmy Wilson, Luke Sewell and Del Baker were catchers. Only Ott, Southworth and Stengel came from the outfield. Pitchers, supposedly the brains of a ball club, rarely become managers, and when they do usually flop. Exception: Clark Griffith, a great National League pitching star who managed the White Sox to the American League's first pennant.

BOXING?—If you fear (hope) that the racket has seen the last of Max Addlepate Baer, be herewith reassured (dismayed), for a Billy Conn-Baer fight is almost certain for Madison Square Garden sometime this winter. There aren't many fighters around with whom Conn can be matched. For instance, a Conn-Nova fight would be a bore, but not even a bloody one. Billy will draw well only with punchers, and there are only a couple in the business. But the puncher must have a name, for Billy versus a so-so fighter is not a good drawing card.

We've long since stopped feeling indignant about Baer's antics in the ring. He can't be measured by customary standards. We expect him in the Conn fight to convince us that at long last he's dead serious, to throw some of the most murderous-looking punches in history at the air where Billy stood only a split-second before, to get cut, to surrender in the midst of hammy histrionics, to pack the Garden to the doors, to retire again immediately after the match, and to return to his ranch and await the next call from the man who knows a golden egg-laying goose when he sees me, Mike Jacobs.

FOOTBALL?—Whizzer White, of Colorado, Oxford, Yale and the Detroit Lions, has called it a career. And what a noble one! He was a rare duck in football: A Phi Beta Kappa man, an All-America at a relatively obscure school, a $15,000-a-year man with the Pittsburgh team (and the league's leading ground-gainer that year), a Rhodes scholar for a year, then a member of the Lions (and once again the league's leading ground-gainer). Now he's headed for the Army. He ended his grid career last Sunday. There are a number of games to be played Sunday in the National League, but it is likely that Whizzer's 1941 average of 13.8 yards on punt returns and 25.9 yards on kick-off returns will stand as records for the season.

He was a great boon to football and to sports in general. He had class. Let that be his sports epitaph.

Promoter Would Blast Jacobs' 'Monopoly'

Taylor Says Mike Encouraged Robinson's 'Run Out;' Urges Probe

By the United Press

New York, Dec. 5.—A beautiful boxing friendship was terminated abruptly today when Promoter Herman Taylor, of Philadelphia, threatened to "blast wide open" Mike Jacobs' alleged prize fight monopoly.

Taylor, who charges that Promoter Jacobs inspired welterweight Contender Ray Robinson to "run out" on a Philadelphia fight, announced that he will request Congressmen James McGrannery and Leon Sachs, of Pennsylvania to initiate an official Washington investigation of the alleged monopoly.

Moreover, Taylor said his attorney, Charles L. Guerin, of Philadelphia, will start immediate legal action in Federal Court to restrain Young Robinson from future ring activities until he goes through with a contracted Philadelphia bout with Marty Servo, of the United States Navy.

Matched for Return

In a lengthy statement to the press, Taylor explained that Robinson, undefeated young New York Negro, had won a split decision over Servo at Philadelphia in September. Afterward they were matched for a return bout on November 10. At Robinson's request, this bout was postponed twice, to November 18 and to December 1.

"And then," says Taylor, "Robinson comes down with the grip, necessitating another indefinite postponement. Meanwhile I had given Robinson's manager, Curt Horrmann, an advance of $500 and he had promised that Robinson would fight no one before Servo. But Horrmann and Robinson have signed to meet Young Kid McCoy for Jacobs at the Garden January 19. And today, when Horrmann was supposed to set a new date for the Robinson-Servo fight at Philadelphia, Horrmann said Robinson would not fight Servo or anyone else until after meeting McCoy and possibly Champion Freddie Cochrane in a title fight. Horrmann gave me back my $500. But Horrmann and Jacobs can't do this to me. Three times I went to the expense of getting out advertising and tickets for this fight. Because of the postponements, I have been able to stage but one Philadelphia fight this winter. That's how Jacobs' monopoly ruins pro-

Never Home Captures Feature Purse at Charles Town Oval

Phair Ydler Third After Picture Is Taken; Port Wales Is Destroyed

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 5.—Never Home, an 8-year-old gray mare, showed a liking for a sloppy track and led every inch of the way in the fifth race, best offering on the Friday program of the Charles Town Jockey Club, Racing in the interests of the Cedar Hill Farms, Never Home drove into the imaginary wire two lengths in front of a photo finish for second position in which the camera voted for E. Nelson's Adolf by a nose over E. R. Colbert's Phair Ydler.

Heavy rain last night left the racing strip as sloppy as a washboard on Monday morning, but the sun came out brightly and it was "springtime in the valley" for the 6000 customers present. The crowd installed Adolf the favorite and Never Home paid an $8.40 mutuel.

Port Wales Destroyed

The race was marked by an accident. Mrs. Dion K. Kerr's Port Wales fell heavily entering the stretch and broke his left hind leg. The 4-year-old son of Prince of Wales was mercifully destroyed. Apprentice Paul Glidwell slid clear when the horse went down and escaped injury.

Never Home, under the handling of Jockey Buddy Root, bounded to the front at the break and had to withstand repeated challenges of Phair Ydler. The latter finally weakened and Never Home went on to make it 5 victories in 13 tries this year. The winner was clocked in :52 for the 4½ furlongs.

Wire Me Wins

After being thrown by Port Wales, Apprentice Glidewell almost had a like accident on Mrs. M. R. Lewis' Wire Me, the winner of the sixth event. Wire Me stumbled and went into the fence. Glidewell snatched up and let the filly regain her stride and she went on to win by a length from Piper's Tune. Wire Me paid $7.

Forty-three customers were made happy by a return of $157 from the daily double. Jockey W. Wray put up a daring ride to win with Mac's Cantor in the second race and Apprentice Al Bocson did a good job of booting aboard Mr. Jim. a $36.60 shot, in the third race.

USO Quintets Launch Season Here Tonight

The USO service men's basketball league, sponsored by the National Catholic Community Service Club, opens this weekend with five games between teams from various service units in the vicinity of the District.

The Army War College meets a team from the Naval Reserve base on its own court at 7:30 tonight, and simultaneously the Thirtieth Engineers from Fort Belvoir will play Fort Myer at the USO-CCS Club.

Sunday afternoon's games are: Navy Yard vs. Marine Barracks at the War College at 2:30; Marine Air Group 11 vs. 401st Signal Corps from Bolling Field, also at 2:30, in the club gymnasium. After that game, the Thirtieth Engineers from Belvoir plays Army War College on the same court at 4 o'clock.

Eight teams are entered in the league. Games will be played every weekend until March.

†Pulled up.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SIR L., $11.80, $5.20, $4.20; GLORIOUS TIME, $4.20, $3.40; TIME HER, $4.40.

SIR L. forged to the front in the opening furlong, shook off TIME HER to draw out, but had to be kept to pressure to stave off the closing bids of GLORIOUS TIME. The latter dropped back leaving the gate, gained steadily on the outside to midstretch and hung thereafter. TIME HER was sent to contention at once and could not stay with the winner and tired. VENDOR'S LIEN went evenly.

SECOND RACE—About 7 furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:01. Off at 2:01⅕. Winner, Mrs. M. Reis' b. g. (4), by Happy Argo—Georgia Rose. Trained by E. Simms. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:30⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAC'S CANTOR, $5.80, $3.40, $2.40; JAMES, $3.80, $2.80; TOWN CAR, $2.40.

MAC'S CANTOR bulled his way between MAEWHISK and the rail at the first turn, came to the outside of TOWN CAR'S pace to take command leaving the backstretch, bore out at the final turn and held on gamely while closing on the outside of the track. JAMES, sluggish in the early stages, came to the inside in the stretch and closed fastest of all. TOWN CAR ran into the lead at once, saved ground and fought it out with good energy. SARANITE, off slowly, moved up menacingly approaching the stretch and then weakened.

THIRD RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $500; claiming. For 3-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 2:30. Off at 2:31. Winner, Flamingo Farm's b. g. (3), by Mayne—Spinnaker. Trained by W. C. Kennedy. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:24⅕.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MR. JIM, $36.60, $14.80, $6.80; CHANCE RUN, $5.00, $3.40; PETE'S PRINCE, $2.80.

MR. JIM took the lead from SCOOTIE early, withstood frequent challenges from CHANCE RUN and held sway thereafter under good handling. CHANCE RUN was well placed on the outside from the beginning, was hard ridden, but could not stay with the winner. PETE'S PRINCE appeared sore going to the post, was off slowly and made up some ground. SCOOTIE forced the early pace and weakened gradually.

Daily Double—MAC'S CANTOR and MR. JIM Paid $157.

FOURTH RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $500; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place easily. Went to post at 3:00½. Off at 3:01½. Winner, Mrs. Helene W. Boyle's b. c. (4), by High Time—Stumble. Trained by O. P. Kent. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:19⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NOON STEP, $8.40, $3.20, $2.80; SILVER BEAM, $2.60, $2.40; STORY TIME, $3.80.

NOON STEP gained the lead at the first turn, drew far out and won while in hand. SILVER BEAM, fractious at the post and off slowly, gained steadily and came gamely at the close. STORY TIME could not reach serious contention while hard ridden. JEANE JOCK broke alertly and weakened after a half. RISE AND SHINE had some early speed.

FIFTH RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $500; allowances. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:31. Off at 3:31½. Winner, Cedar Hill Farm's gr. m. (8), by Tournament II—My Idol. Trained by P. Poluch. Value to winner, $350; second, $75; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:52.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—NEVER HOME, $8.40, $3.80, $3.60; ADOLF, $4.60, $3.60; PHAIR YDLER, $16.20.

NEVER HOME, first away, withstood repeated challenges of PHAIR YDLER and drew out under urging in the closing stages. ADOLF, off slowly, came with a bold rush on the outside at the end. PHAIR YDLER pressed the pace into the stretch and was tiring at the finish. BUTTERMAN was hard ridden in the first flight and tired through the stretch run.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:01½. Off at 4:02½. Winner, Mrs. M. R. Lewis' b. f. (3), by Trace Call—Black Wire. Trained by J. Y. Christmas. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:59.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WIRE ME, $7.00, $3.80, $3.00; PIPER'S TUNE, $44.20, $13.60; DEVIL'S RUN, $3.80.

WIRE ME took command after a half while running easily, opened a long lead, swerved into the fence inside the sixteenth pole, was placed to the whip thereafter and was all out at the end. PIPER'S TUNE held sway through the first half, gave way to the winner thereafter and held on gamely to the end. DEVIL'S RUN improved his position gradually but could not reach the top ones. AGNES KNIGHT raced within striking distance to the stretch, where she slid into the fence and was eased up.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $600; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:36½. Off at 4:37. Winner, B. T. Pitts' br. g. (6), by Sand Mole—Vexnow. Trained by J. T. Harris. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 1:51⅘.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—MYSTIC MAN, $70.60, $16.80, $8.00; TAKITFROME, $6.60, $4.80; HEZDREL, $4.80.

MYSTIC MAN took the lead at once, drew out and was kept to pressure to stave off the closing bid of TAKITFROME. The latter was well placed from the start, closed with good energy, but was held safe. HEZDREL stumbled leaving the gate, improved his position gradually and closed willingly. HOT MAN was badly outrun early and closed some ground.

At The Post

Selections at Charles Town

Dear Al:

Jockey Eddie Smith has hung up his tack and will not resume riding until Tropical Park opens. Many of the horses here will move on to New Orleans at the conclusion of this meeting. Horsemen were pleased to hear that President A. J. Boyle had increased purses. Among the smaller ovals, Charles Town has always set the pace in upping the ante for the boys who pay the feed bills. Beverly Broun, popular chairman of the West Virginia Racing Commission, came over from Charleston for the weekend's sport. He is president of the National Association of State Racing Commissioners. Trainers Bill Mulholland and Tommy Rodrock came up from Washington for the racing. Al Howard, Washington business man, is entertaining 40 guests at the races. The party stayed last night at the nearby Blue Ridge Rod and Gun Club. The United States Army is looking for stallions. Col. Theodore Dessausure will be here next Friday to make purchases. Although the track will be off, today's program should provide plenty of thrills. Walter Haight, the colt, is missing. Owner-Trainer Alan Clarke was up yesterday and the last time I saw him he was still trying to find the son of Mowlee and Nora's Grace. Somebody said he got a little hungry and ate the side of his stall. The Bedwells have saddled four beaten favorites here in five days. Al Bocson, who has had a hard road while trying to become a jockey, turned in a good ride yesterday on Mr. Jim to take that race. He held the son of Mayne together in good fashion and deserves some more mounts. The new Bahr starting gate is working well. It offers the maximum of protection for horses, jockeys and assistant starters. Reggie Root, the son of Jockey Buddy Root, is getting to be a big boy and he's crazy over horses. Grant Pollock and Walter Haight will air the feature race over WOL today, starting at 4 p. m. See you on the rail.

BILL.

First race—ROYAL ECHO appears nicely placed in this field. Needs only the right handling to finish on the top end. ZYLOXXIE will appreciate the off going and is a threat. GENNARO for the minor money.

Second race—ASTER LADY will have her race track and has the speed necessary to down this kind. A sticky track will be right up the alley of CHIEF CHEROKEE and his will be as good as those ailing legs. CONNAMISTA to take care of the others.

Third race—STORMINESS gets my call in a very open race. Likely to get to the front early and I'm going to try to make this one stay there. McHENRY and SUN MONIA are good and will battle it out if the top one makes mistakes.

Fourth race—BERWYN is the class of this field and deserves the pick despite top weight. IN PORT was second after being in trouble last out. MARANDAN won here.

Fifth race—WHIP-AWAY won rather easily earlier in the week. I'm going to take a chance on his liking for the off track, however. JUNGLE MOON and BOLD RISK turned in fine efforts here and will be in the thick of contention.

Sixth race—RELIOUS may win the day's feature at a good price. This one is better than generally rated and will like the track. The Christmas entry of CHEER ME and KEY RING will take part of the money. ROYAL BUSINESS will not have her track.

Seventh race—TANGANYIKA turned that form flip-flop to win at Bowie and they should bar her if she runs a poor race. ERIN'S GIRL and RIPPLING RAY to take care of the others.

Eighth race—If this race is used, I'll take TWO PLY, QUEEN MEADOW and COMPOMAC.

Best bet—TANGANYIKA.

New Car Sales In D. C. Slump 60% in Month

Sales of new passenger cars in Washington plummeted 60 per cent in October as compared with the same month last year, the Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond reported yesterday. The month's registrations here totaled 1250 units against 3109 in October, 1940.

Stocks of new cars here and elsewhere in the Fifth Federal Reserve District are reported accumulating in dealers' hands. However, in view of further restrictions on new car manufacturing expected later in the current model year the excess of new cars on hand over sales is not regarded as a disadvantage.

For the first ten months this year District of Columbia auto sales were reported 18 per cent more than in the same period last year. The comparative sales figures were 27,791 and 23,634.

The sharp slump in sales were general throughout the area. Maryland reported 41 per cent fewer cars sold in October. Virginia showed an 18 per cent drop. The ten months' volume remained well above the same period last year, Maryland showing a gain of 25 per cent and Virginia showing an increase of 44 per cent.

In other lines of Washington business in October the Federal Reserve Bank reported substantial gains. Furniture sales during the month were 22 per cent heavier and for the first ten months were 35 per cent improved.

Washington employment in October was reported 1.1 per cent improved and payrolls were 2.8 per cent heavier. Bank debits in October showed 15 per cent gain and for the 10-month period were 34 per cent higher.

9 Billion Offered U.S. at 1½ Billion Defense Bond Sale

The Treasury announced last night that preliminary reports showed a heavy oversubscription of the record-breaking $1,500,000,000 bond sale offered Thursday.

Investors oversubscribed the one billion dollars in 2½ per cent bonds with 1967-72 maturity by 6½ times, a spokesman said, and the half billion dollars in 2 per cent bonds by 9 times. The latter mature from 1951 to 1955.

He added that since there was already $1,600,000,000 outstanding in the 2½ per cent bonds, yesterday's sale would close the issue.

It was the largest single offering of Treasury securities for cash since the World War.

Oil Supplies Gain 920,000 Bbls. in Week

The Bureau of Mines reported yesterday stocks of domestic and foreign crude petroleum at the close of the week ended November 29 totaled 242,884,000 barrels, a net increase of 928,000 barrels compared with the previous week. Stocks of domestic oil increased 903,000 barrels for the week and foreign crude increased 25,000 barrels.

Daily average production for the week was 4,087,000 barrels or a decrease of 250,000 barrels compared with the previous week's level. Runs to stills averaged 4,115,000 barrels daily, compared with 3,995,000 barrels for the preceding week.

Montgomery Ward Sales Spurt 16%

Chicago, Dec. 5 (AP).—Montgomery Ward & Co. today reported November sales of $63,344,711 which compared with $54,613,283 in November of last year, an increase of 15.99 per cent.

For the first ten motnhs of the year sales totaled $547,155,860, an increase of 23.89 per cent over the comprable period a year ago when the figure was $441,664,031.

Mosier Put on Board Of American Airlines

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—O. M. Mosier, vice president of American Airlines, Inc., has been elected a director, the company announced today. Mosier, former Army flier and city manager of Oklahoma City, Okla., joined American Airlines in 1938 on his resignation as vice president and general manager of Braniff Airways.

England Places Order For 20 U.S. Locomotives

Lima, Ohio, Dec. 5 (AP).—The Lima Locomotive Works will build 20 locomotives to be exported to England under lease-lend agreement, company officials said in announcing receipt of a War Department contract. The undertaking "exceeds two million dollars," officials said.

U. S. Alone Exceeds Axis Steel Production

WORLD STEEL CAPACITY—Production by Germany and the Axis-dominated countries totals about 57,950,000 tons of steel annually, or about 28,199,000 tons less than the United States capacity alone. The democracies and their allies have a total ingot capacity of 124,049,000 tons a year, or more than twice that of the Axis. Kniskern Sees Outlook Bright For Real Estate

By the Associated Press

Atlantic City, N. J., Dec. 5.—Philip W. Kniskern, of Philadelphia, president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, said today real estate men had reason to be extremely optimistic.

He told the New Jersey Association of Real Estate Boards that sales of real estate all over the country had increased consistently and rapidly since the beginning of this year and that this upward movement had been almost unbroken since the middle of 1938.

"There is every indication," he said, "that the upward movement will continue. Foreclosures are at the lowest point since 1926."

Julius I. Kislak, Jersey City realtor, reported apartment houses were rapidly changing hands because investors were turning to apartment buildings because of the low rate of interest on savings.

He said apartment houses were especially attractive investments now because "all the water of the lush 1920's has been squeezed out" and many persons regard income-producing real estate as the best hedge against inflation.

Locomotive Quota Set At 1250 Next Year

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—The locomotive industry will be asked to deliver 1000 units in 1942 for domestic use and more than 250 for export, William C. Dickerman, chairman of American Locomotive Co., said at the annual meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers.

Nearly 200 of the locomotives to be exported, Dickerman added, would be shipped under provisions of the Lease-Lend Act. Their destination probably would be Egypt, where they would replace engines shifted elsewhere to transport war materials from the Persian Gulf to Russia.

Dickerman suggested that because of the emergency, existing locomotive designs be used.

Revere Copper Revises Capital Structure

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—A special meeting of stockholders of Revere Copper & Brass Co. held at Baltimore reclassified the 206,385 outstanding shares of class "A" stock into 722,347½ shares of common stock, a ratio of 3½ to 1, it was announced today.

The management said the purpose of the proposed reclassification was to simplify the capital structure.

Morgan Stanley Files to Dissolve Corporate Status

Albany, N. Y., Dec. 5 (AP).—Morgan Stanley & Co., Inc., Wall Street investment banking offshoot of J. P. Morgan & Co., incorporated in September, 1935, has filed papers of dissolution with the secretary of state, it was announced today.

Spokesmen for the firm said last week a new firm, a general partnership including most of the officers of the dissolved corporation, will succeed to the business. The change from a corporate status, they explained, was designed to give the firm more flexibility in dealing with a changing investment situation.

Articles for the new partnership are expected to be filled next week with the New York county clerk.

Those who signed the dissolution papers were Harold Stanley, president; William Ewing, executive vice president; Henry S. Morgan, treasurer and secretary; Alfred Shriver, Perry E. Hall, John M. Young, Allen Northey Jones, Edward H. York, jr., and Sumner B. Emerson, vice presidents.

Week's Auto Output Drops to 90,205

Detroit, Dec. 5 (AP).—Output of United States and Canadian automobile plants this week was estimated today by Ward's Reports, Inc., at 90,205 cars and trucks, a decrease from the 93,495 units completed during the final week of November when, the survey said, many producers were rushing to complete assemblies allowed under the initial OPM-imposed curtailment period.

Total output a year ago this week was 130,040 cars and trucks.

B. & O. Seeks To Circumvent New State Tax

By the Associated Press

The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad asked authority yesterday to change contract agreements under which it operates passenger trains between Philadelphia and New York in an effort to ease its tax situation in New Jersey.

Under the proposal the Baltimore & Ohio would enter into new contracts with the Reading Co. and the Central Railroad Co. of New Jersey for continued operation of connecting through trains which the B. & O. now operates under trackage rights with the two companies.

The railroad said its tax bill in New Jersey for passenger operations had averaged about $15,000 a year but that it would have to pay $285,000 additional under the new law if the present system of operations were continued.

In a petition filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission the Baltimore & Ohio said the Reading Co. and the Central of New Jersey would continue their own independent passenger and freight operations over the line. Furthermore, the B. & O. said, it proposes to enter into new agreements with the Reading company and the Central of New Jersey for these companies to render through joint passenger train service between Philadelphia and New York.

Court Lets Big Board Tap Gratuity Fund

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—Members of the New York Stock Exchange were given legal sanction today to change the exchange constitution so as to use the gratuity fund for payment of death levies and thus discontinue the $15 individual levy made on the death of a member.

The State Court of Appeals upheld a ruling by the appellate division which cleared the way for the trustees of the gratuity fund to use its resources for payment of the death levies.

The fund currently has resources of $1,928,000.

J. V. Toner Heads Boston Edison Co.

Boston, Dec. 5 (AP).—James V. Toner was elected president today of the Boston Edison Co., a post made vacant by the death of Frank D. Comerford, whose close friend and business advisor he had been for many years. Toner had been serving as treasurer and executive vice president of the company and had an important part in its reorganization.

Fleek to Head I.B.A.; Folger Vice President

By Fred L. Strozier,
Associated Press Staff Writer

Hollywood Beach, Fla., Dec. 5 (AP). The Investment Bankers Association of America closed its convention today on a note of amity toward the National Administration by pledging its help to the United States Treasury in the sale of defense bonds.

John S. Fleek, of Cleveland, was elected president of the association and quickly set the tone of the final session by pledging "allegiance and full support" to the Government during the emergency.

The 600 delegates followed his lead in adopting a resolution which said:

"That in this time of national emergency we again pledge to our Government the allegiance and full support of the Investment Bankers Association of America.

"That we are vitally concerned in the success of the sale of defense bonds as a most important part of the national defense effort, and

"That we offer our services and facilities freely and wholeheartedly to the United States Treasury in its campaign to sell these bonds, and also in any other manner or activity wherever and whenever we can serve."

Without Charge

Emmett F. Connely, of Detroit, retiring president, said the association would handle defense bonds without charge or make any other arrangement suggested by the Treasury.

Fleek interpreted the resolution as saying to the Government:

"Here we are, chief, what do you want us to do?"

Connely explained that the investment bankers already are engaged in selling defense bonds, but can make deliveries only through Federal Reserve Banks after the actual sale.

Folger Is Elected

Vice presidents elected and inducted today were John Clifford Folger, of Folger, Nolan & Co., Inc., Washington; Edward H. Hilliard, of J. B. Hilliard and Son, Louisville; John K. Starkweather, of Starkweather & Co., New York; John O. Stubbs, of Whiting, Weeks & Stubbs, Inc., Boston, and Jan N. Whipple, of Bacon, Whipple & Co., Chicago. Starkweather was absent.

(J. Clifford Folger, Washington, the new vice president of I. B. A., is well known in Washington financial and civic quarters. He is president of the Washington Bond Club and is in charge of this year's Community Chest drive.)

Nash-Kelvinator Net is Tripled

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—Nash-Kelvinator Corporation reported today net profit for the fiscal year ended September 30 was $4,617,052, equal to $1.07 a common share, compared with $1,505,151 or 35 cents a common share in the preceding fiscal year. Reserve for income and excess profits tax in the recent period was $3,600,000, against $370,000 in the previous year.

Earnings were best since Nash Motors Co. and Kelvinator Corporation (refrigerators) were merged in 1936. G. W. Mason, president of the concern, said indications were that before the end of the current fiscal year defense would account for more than half the company's production.

Bache & Co. Boosts Pay of Employes

The New York Stock Exchange firm of J. S. Bache & Co. yesterday announced a wage increase, effective December 1, of 4 to 6 per cent applicable on a sliding scale. Jules S. Bache stated that the increase is in the nature of a supplemental cost-of-living adjustment.

Raw Sugar Supplies Belie Shortage Reports

Despite heavy consumer purchases of sugar this year, Eastern sugar refiners were said yesterday to have had larger supplies of raw stocks for processing during the last two months of the year than in the corresponding period in 1940.

Agriculture Department officials said they had received reports of shortages of raw sugar from some Eastern refiners. Marketings of raw sugar are controlled by the department under a quota system.

The department said that the quantity of sugar available to refiners south of Cape Hatteras, N. C., during the last two months of this year totaled 429,957 short tons, as compared with their meltings of 219,792 tons during the last two months of 1940.

The 429,957 figure included 154,957 short tons of off-shore sugar either held by these refiners on November 1, receipts between that time and November 22 and sugar afloat or for which vessels had been chartered as of November 22, and 275,000 tons of mainland cane sugar from the 1941 crop.

The comparable 1941 figures on stocks, sugar afloat and charterings of off-shore sugar for refiners north of Cape Hatteras totaled 533,313 tons, the department said. This quantity compared with meltings of 468,711 tons in the November-December period of 1940.

Bankers Ask Assurances on Foreign Trade Notes

The Treasury said yesterday it had received a petition from New York bankers asking assurances that letters of credit for use in conducting foreign trade would not be blocked by the Treasury's foreign funds controls.

Officials said that the matter was being studied, but no decision has been made.

Letters of credit are papers, pledging, usually banks, to make specified payments and are used extensively in international trade. However, the bankers inquired whether, in certain instances, it was still possible for them to issue "irrevocable" letters of credit in view of the fact that money can not be paid to certain countries except upon special licenses from the Treasury.

'New Tax' Scare Blamed as Defense Bond Sales Dip

The "new tax" scare of last month was blamed by some Treasury officials yesterday for a dip in the sale of defense savings bonds in November.

Noting that November sales totaled $238,468,536, or about thirty-seven million dollars less than in October, one of those in charge of the sales campaign commented:

"We can't get away from the fact that some people who might have bought bonds last month failed to do so because of reports that the Treasury was seeking large increases in taxes.

"Whenever something happens that causes people to think they're going to need their spare cash for other purposes, we must expect some influence on bonds sales."

This official added that he believed another reason for the November decline was the fact that there were fewer business days in November because of five days and two holidays in the month.

In the seven months since the sales campaign began, sales have aggregated about $2,013,500,000. This does not include proceeds from the sale of defense stamps, except in instances where stamps have been turned in as payment for bonds.

U. S. Loan League Asks Slash in U. S. Nondefense Costs

By the Associated Press

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 5.—The United States Savings and Loan League called today for a drastic curtailment of Government spending in nondefense fields.

Limiting the Federal defense housing program to "rapidly built, demountable units providing only the necessities of comfortable and livable shelter" also was demanded in resolutions adopted at the close of the forty-ninth annual convention.

Declaring that the solution to the problem of the low-income family does not lie in providing new housing, the league advised the ending of Government subsidization of new housing projects.

Members asked for retention in the postwar period of features of the free enterprise system "which have resulted in greater individual freedom and a higher standard of living in this nation."

The Administration's foreign policy was given the approval of the 1500 delegates, who favored unlimited expenditures for necessary defense activity.

Wholesale Commodity Index Continues Rise

By the Associated Press

Wholesale commodity prices increased 0.1 per cent during the last week in November the Labor Department announced yesterday, but still were 1.3 per cent below the same week of 1929. They were, however, 12.6 per cent above 1937.

Last week's rise pushed the department's index to 92.3 per cent of the 1926 level. This figure, also reached in mid-November, represented an 11-year peak.

Retail Turnover In Week Reported 15 to 18% Better

New York, Dec. 5 (AP).—Nationwide reports on holiday buying in retail centers ranged from "lackadaisical" to "best on record" this week, Dun & Bradstreet said today in a survey.

The agency said the average increase in turnover ranged from 15 to 18 per cent over the camparable 1940 week.

"Although holiday buying, after an early and strong start, was on a firm basis in most cities, retailers disagreed on results obtained in lines outside of gift departments," the review stated.

Some stores reported that demand reached such tempo that even unseasonally mild weather failed to retard the movement of winter merchandise.

Volume in most lines maintained an increase over last year equal at least to the advance in prices. New car sales and fur sales were the outstanding exceptions, generally showing a drop in dollar volume despite price increases.

Hosiery, a laggard since last summer's buying rush, had its best week in months.

Profit Reports And Dividends

Mergenthaler Linotype Co. declared a dividend of $1.50 a share on common stock, bringing total payments for the year to $4. The disbursement is payable December 23 to holders of record December 15.

L. C. Smith & Corona Typewriters Inc. voted a dividend of 75 cents a common share, which will raise payments for the year to $2 a share against the 50 cents paid in 1940. The dividend is payable December 27 to holders of record December 15.

National Can Corporation directors authorized a dividend of 25 cents a share, payable December 23 to holders of record December 12, it was announced today. Previous payment was in 1938 on the stock of the predecessor company, McKeesport Tin Plate Corporation.

Stocks Trend Ragged With Moves in Rut

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 5.—Irregularly lower tendencies cropped up in today's stock market although recessions mostly were in minor fractions and modest plus signs were plentiful at the close.

Price hesitancy ruled at the start and losses ran to a point or so in the morning. Declines were reduced in the majority of cases in the final hour.

Blocks of 1000 to 10,000 shares of low-quoted issues again lifted the volume but the day's aggregate slipped to 976,880 shares after topping the million mark in the three preceding sessions. Thursday's total was 1,126,960.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was off .3 of a point at 39.5.

Nonstimulating News

Speculative forces found nothing particularly stimulating in the news although individual support was attributed to another batch of fairly good dividends and earnings statements. Persistent handicaps, brokers said, persisted in United States-Japanese war talk, tax fears and labor worries.

Bulletins from African and Russian battle fronts failed to prop sentiment to any noticeable extent. Many customers stood aside as a precaution against untoward events over the weekend and to await publication of Tokyo's reply to Washington's queries anent Far Eastern problems.

Paramount Pictures, recently registering new year's highs, eased ⅜ to 15¼ as holders apparently were a bit disappointed over the 25-cent dividend. Some had expected more in view of the concern's profits showing.

Rails at Standstill

Rails were unable to do much as the question of increased freight rates to offset partially the wage boost remained unanswered. Scrap and pig iron shortages retarded steels while motors had to contend with a drop in this week's automotive production. Aircrafts were under water throughout for no outstanding reason. Forecasts of record Christmas spending left merchandising issues cold.

On the offside were U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, General Motors, Chrysler, Montgomery Ward, Sears Roebuck, N. Y. Central, Great Northern, Chesapeake & Ohio, American Telephone, Du Pont, Johns-Manville, U. S. Gypsum, Allied Chemical, Dow Chemical and Standard Oil (N. J.).

Santa Fe and Southern Pacific edged upward at the last. Advances also were rationed by Youngstown Sheet, U. S. Rubber, Goodrich, General Electric, American Can, Texas Co., Nash-Kelvinator, Warner Bros., Anaconda and Kennecott.

Bonds never made any appreciable headway. Commodities steadied. Cotton ended up 90 cents to $1.15 a bale. At Chicago wheat was off ¼ to up as much, corn down ⅛ to ¼ and hogs steady to 10 cents higher.

Aluminum Ltd., tilted forward in the Curb along with Electric Bond & Share, American Hard Rubber and Sherwin Williams. Losers included American Gas, Humble Oil, Gulf Oil and Creole Petroleum. Turnover here approximated 203,000 shares compared with 247,000 yesterday.

18 Courtmen Are Available For Colonials

Coach Bill Reinhart will be able to carry a George Washington University basketball squad of six players more than last year if the 18 remaining courtmen stick it out for the strenuous Colonial schedule.

Reinhart had only 12 men available through last season and used only eight to any extent as the Colonials won 18 out of 23 games. This season Bill Fulton, a junior college graduate from Huntington, W. Va., who is currently troubled with a bad knee, is the only one of the present 18-man squad likely to miss the opening game and the squad except for trips will be either 17 or 18 players.

George Washington opens a week from tonight, December 13, with Wake Forest, a Southern Conference opponent, at Tech High School.

The Midwestern clubs begin their Christmas vacation visit December 17 when the Oklahoma Aggies visit Riverside while Oklahoma University follows December 22 and Indiana December 27.

The Aggies, who beat George Washington in overtime last December, opened with a 40-24 victory over Texas Tech Wednesday night.

Hoya Hockey Team Makes Debut Tonight

Georgetown's ice hockey team, reported to be considerably improved over its successful club of last year, will make its 1941 debut tonight at 8 o'clock in a match with La Salle College of Philadelphia at Riverside Stadium.

Following La Salle, the Hilltop icemen will meet Pennsylvania, Catholic University, Temple, Penn State, Drexel, St. Joseph's, Lehigh and Franklin and Marshall, and several other teams yet to be scheduled.

Although the Georgetown squad finds it difficult to get in more than a couple of evening practices a week, it believes it will do better than last year's team, which enjoyed a winning season. Increased strength on defense, plus a group of wingmen equally as good as in 1940, are the factors that presage a better season, say the Hoyas.

There will be plenty of heft on the Georgetown defense lines, what with George Perpich, 218-pound varsity regular football tackle, and 205-pound Mickey Ford, promising freshman fullback, among the candidates. Two other top defense men are Al Yukna, football end and tackle, and Bill Berbet.

Among the forward linesmen are holdovers Bill Deegan, John McQueeney, Bob Pender and Carl Routh and newcomers John Bernet, Dick Fullam, John Conway and Bus Werder. Another returning ace is Hugh O'Neil, who will be back in the nets.

the final day of the convention was the sale of Outfielder-Third Baseman Debs Garms to Sacramento, of the Pacific Coast League, by Pittsburgh.

In 1940 Garms captured the National League batting championship with an average of .355, but last season he dropped to .262.

This transaction apparently was the final installment toward the payment of Pitcher Hank Gornicki, whom the Pirates purchased from the St. Louis Cardinals a couple of days ago for about $15,000 cash.

Wilder Elected

The minor leagues completed their business with the election of Dr. E. M. Wilder, president of the South Atlantic League, to the chairmanship of the executive committee of the National Association.

Frank Shaughnessy, president of the International League, was named to succeed George Trautman, president of the American Association and former chairman of the committee.

Latins Like American Wine

Fresno, Calif. (U.P.)—A noticeable increase in sales of California wines to Latin American countries has been reported here. Table wines are in greater demand by Central and South American countries than the dessert and appetizer types, according to the report.

Steve Belloise Arrives Today For Furr Bout

Belloise, the first fighter to enlist in Gene Tunney's unit as a boxing instructor and now quartered with the United States Navy in Jacksonville, Fla., is to open final conditioning for Furr behind closed doors at a local gymnasium today, and will terminte his drills here Monday.

That Sailor Steve has lost none of his popularity and punch since entering Uncle Sam's service has been proven within the past year. Not only has he developed into a better attraction than ever before, but he also has knocked out such reputable boys as Irish Eddie Dunne, Andre Jessurun, Jay McCadon, Vic Dellicurti and Irwin Kay Kaplan.

Belloise, who was being boomed for the middleweight boxing championship less than two years ago, also has twice knocked out Wicky Harkins, credited with a great stand against Furr here recently.

Belloise Impressive

It was against Overlin that Belloise impressed as a potential champion, flooring clever Ken and having him on the verge of a knockout in the early rounds of their first bout before Overlin rallied sufficiently to gain a close decision. Overlin won more handily in a return bout, but slugging Steve lost no prestige as he continued to set a hot pace.

Furr set a terrific pace in a workout at the Apollo Athletic Club's gymnasium yesterday, and boosted his stock several notches in so doing. Matchmaker John Attell, present for the workout, predicted that the local veteran would be in even better shape for Belloise than he was for his memorable bout with Fritzie Zivic last week, and would make one of the greatest fights of his lengthy career against Sailor Steve.

Greenbelt High Defeats Alumni

Greenbelt High School's basketball team turned out a strong second-half drive by the alumni to win, 23 to 21, at Greenbelt last night.

The school varsity, led by Forward Bill Dodson, sprang to a 14-4 lead over the alumni at the end of the first half, but were seriously challenged in the waning moments. Dodson, a senior, scored nine of his team's points.

16 Sandlot Stars Chosen For Pro Clubs

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 5 (AP).—Organized baseball was offered an opportunity today to sign the most promising sandlot players in each of the 48 States.

President Ray Dumont of the National Semi-Pro Baseball Congress announced that three-man boards, drawn from the major and minor leagues, would select the 16 outstanding players in each State seimpro tournament, each to be awarded an All-State certificate from the national organization. Each group, Dumont said, would include five pitchers, two catchers, four infielders, three outfielders and two utility players.

The No. 1 player of each State tournament would be named on an All-America team, comprising 48 players. No player with previous experience in organized baseball would be eligible for All-State or All-America recognition.

The list of the All-State players, with home addresses, are to be turned over to all clubs in organized baseball.

Dumont said many of the Nation's professional players got their start in the State tournament program, including Freddie Hutchinson, high-priced rookie of a few years ago, and John Pesky, of Louisville, voted the most reliable player in the American Association.

Northwestern Awarded Meet

Chicago, Dec. 5 (AP).—The annual Western Conference outdoor track and field championship meet was awarded today to Northwestern University for May 29-30, at the conference winter meeting.

The indoor championships again will be held in the University of Chicago fieldhouse, March 6-7, and the conference swimming title meet will be held at the University of Michigan March 13-14. The tennis meet was awarded to Ohio State University for May 21-23.

It also was announced that the national collegiate A. A. track and field meet will be held at the University of Nebraska June 19-20, and the annual Drake relay games at Des Moines, Iowa, April 24-25.

The Central Intercollegiate Conference, also in session, announced it's indoor track title meet for March 6-7 at Michigan State College, East Lansing, Mich., and the outdoor meet again at Marquette University, Milwaukee, the afternoon and night of June 6.

Mrs. Greenhalgh Named to Board

Berryville, Va., Dec. 5.—Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, widely known hunter and jumper exhibitor of Springsbury Farm, near here, has been named to the hunter committee of the American Horse Shows Association in New York, it was learned today.

Long an enthusiastic member of Virginia show ring and hunting circles, Mrs. Greenhalgh's duties will commence with the annual meeting of the equine-governing body in New York on January 9, when legislaion will be enacted for the coming year.

Simpson Five Spoils Drake's Opener, 35-34

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 5 (AP).—Simpson College slipped past Drake, 35 to 34, tonight to spoil the Bulldogs' basketball opener.

Drake held the lead five times and never trailed by more than 4 points but the Redmen cinched the game with a second-half drive that produced 17 points in 12 minutes. A last-minute effort by the Missouri Valley Conference quintet was just too late to overtake Simpson's lead.

Howell King Kayoes Mangini in Fourth

Worcester, Mass., Dec. 5 (AP).—Howell King, Detroit Negro middleweight fighter, tonight pounded out a technical knockout victory over Pat Mangini, 159, Philadelphia. Hammering at Mangini in a scheduled ten rounder, King, 152 pounds, had the Philadelphian groggy on his feet when the referee stopped the bout after 2 minutes 27 seconds of the fourth round.

Grin and Bear It

By Lichty

"If it's remnants you're interested in, why not wait 'til we get home and look at my shirts, socks, and underwear?"

Listen! with Glynn

Promotion of international good will being the worthy principle it is—even though it does seem to be being honored in the breach for the most part these days—this is to announce that it's going to be very much in the air in Washington, effective as of 1:30 p. m. today.

We have reference to Meredith Howard's new radio series which you'll be hearing over WJSV every Saturday at that time.

The programs are originating in the dining room of Hotel 2400, where the Saturday Luncheon Club, presided over by Baroness Stackelberg, will go on the air under Miss Howard's direction and with her commentary.

Each Saturday a different nation will be honored at the luncheons and the most prominent feminine representatives of that nation will be the guest of honor and featured speaker. The food, the music, the decorations will be in keeping with the customs of the nation being so honored.

The guest today will be Lady Halifax, wife of the British ambassador. The food will include such approprite British dishes as kidney pie and Yorkshire pudding. The music, by Pete Macias's Orchestra, with WJSV's Bob Pace as soloist, will present the rhythms of English composers, from Elgar to Noel Coward.

On succeeding weeks, other countries will be so saluted, along with their leading feminine representatives, until the world has been properly covered.

Contract Bridge

Three no-trump is not the simplest of contracts to play, and many fans shy away from this bid as if it were the plague. But if you can manage a no-trump hand as nicely as today's declarer you needn't fear it; in fact, you can even reach for it when the cards are a little bit short, as he did.

Today's Hand

Both Sides Vulnerable
SOUTH DEALER

	♠ J8 ♡ K J 10 2 ◇ 8 5 3 ♣ A 10 6 2
♠ Q 10 6 5 2 ♡ Q 8 ◇ J 10 7 ♣ J 7 4	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ K 9 3 ♡ A 9 8 4 ◇ K 6 ♣ Q 9 5 3
	♠ A 7 4 ♡ 7 5 3 ◇ A Q 9 4 2 ♣ K 9

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT.	Pass	2 NT.	Pass
3 NT.	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 5 ♠.

The hand was reported by Frank K. Perkins for Bridge World.

South fulfilled his contract, even though his adversary's spade suit was established at once, by first holding off until East was exhausted in the suit, then playing his cards so as to keep West out of the lead.

The spade jack was put up from dummy on the first lead; East's king covered and declarer let it hold. Two more spades were led and declarer won the third round. Now he played a heart, finessed the ten and drew East's ace. East returned a heart, having no more spades, as it was the least dangerous lead from his hand. He knew that if his partner held the heart queen it was trapped in any case.

A low diamond was played and declarer took the finesse of the queen with his fingers crossed. It held, but this was not enough; he needed a low diamond trick also to make his bid. Back to the dummy he went with the ace of clubs. Another low diamond was led, and when East came up with the king, declarer rightly let the king take. Whatever return East made, declarer could win, cash his diamond ace, drawing the opposing diamond, and take his low cards in the suit.

In this way he prevented West from obtaining the lead on the third round of diamonds, which would have been the case had he taken the king with the ace and then played small, hoping for the best.

South made three no-trump, losing two spades, one heart and one diamond.

Rainfall's Over, That Is, for Today

It ain't gonna rain no more, at least not today, according to the Weather Man, but just the same more of the "California mist" fell from Thursday night until 11:45 a. m. yesterday than during the entire month of November.

In fact, today is expected to be rather pleasant, with the temperature staying around 54 degrees, and the sky only partly cloudy. Last night, it was predicted, 50 degrees would be the low.

The rain which ended yesterday amounted to 1.04 inches, while during November only .58 inch was recorded. The high temperature yesterday was 66 degrees at 4:15 p. m., with the low 57 degrees at 3:40 a. m.

WAIT! LET ME GO FIRST SO I'LL HAVE SOMETHING TO FALL BACK ON!
A—ARE YOU STILL WITH ME?

DON WINSLOW OF THE NAVY — Dead Center — BY FRANK MARTINEK

YOU'LL ADMIT, GENTLEMEN, WE'VE FOUND NOTHING UNUSUAL IN THE SERVICE RECORDS OF OUR TURRET CREWS. I REFUSE TO BELIEVE THERE'S A SABOTEUR AMONG THEM
AND WHAT'S BEEN THE BASIS FOR ALL THIS FUSS, ANYWAY? NOTHING BUT VAGUE SUSPICION.
Y-YES, SIR
WELL, WELL, WE ALL MAKE MISTAKES, WINSLOW. FORGET THE WHOLE THING.
OUR SHAKEDOWN PROGRAM WILL PROCEED, OF COURSE. THE FIRING TESTS OF THE BIG GUNS START TOMORROW.
THAT'S THAT. GUESS WE WERE WRONG
LOOKS LIKE IT, MAC. BUT SOMEHOW I STILL FEEL UNEASY, AS THOUGH THERE IS DANGER AHEAD AND WE'VE MUFFED A CLUE!

GIVE HIM THIS GIFT CERTIFICATE AND HE GETS THIS MALLORY HAT

Show your appreciation of his good taste by giving him a Mallory "Tag" Certificate, attached to a gay, perky Gift Box containing a novel miniature hat. Which means, of course, he's perfectly free to select the Mallory model that does him full justice. No chance of his saying, "Just what I wanted!" . . . and not meaning it. For a Mallory is the right hat for the right man.
